——— Ss. 133 and 139—Discharge of surety—Rescission of contract

The plffs. agreed to buy from a firm a quantity of cotton at certain rate and time. The defendant as surety guaranteed the performance of the contract. The plffs. subsequently agreed to sell to the firm the same cotton for the same delivery at a higher rate. The plff. sued the def. to recover the difference between the rates of the two contracts or the difference between the rate of the first contract and the rate on the due date of delivery. The defendant contended that he was discharged from his suretyship by reason of the second contract between the plff. and the firm. Held, that each of the contracts was capable of performance on the due date and there was no rescission of the original contract by a new agreement and therefore the deft. was not discharged from suretyship. The plffs appointed deft No. 1 as their Sub-agent to sell goods on commission and the latter was to get all the office expenses Deft. No. 2 stood surety for deft. No. 1 and expressly waived all or any of the rights as surety which may at any time be inconsistent herewith and which he might be otherwise entitled to claim and enforce, and further agreed that the guarantee shall not be revocable at any time, but shall continue during the employment of the sub-agent ; subsequently, the plffs. varied, without the knowledge or consent of deft. No. 2, their contract with deft. No. 1 whereby the latter was to receive commission, at a higher rate. A question having arisen whether the variation has the effect of discharging the surety. Held, that by the variation, the surety was discharged as to transactions subsequent to the variation. —— Ss 151 and 152—Bailment—Suit against bailee for damages—Negligence, proof of—Onus on plaintiff—Duty of defendant.

In a suit against an ordinary bailee, as defined in Ss. 151 and 152, for not taking care of the goods and saving them from loss, e. g., loss of fire, the bailee should call all the material witnesses who were on the spot at the time of the loss. But that does not discharge the plaintiff from proving want of due diligence, or negligence on the part of the bailee or his servants. Good sense and policy of the law impose some limit upon the amount of care and skill required of a person who was to encounter a sudden emergency. In a moment of peril and difficulty the Court should not expect perfect presence of mind, accurate judgment, and promptitude. If a man is suddenly put in an extremely difficult position and a wrong order is given by him, it ought not to be attributed to him as a thing done with such want of care and skill as to amount to negligence If in a sudden emergency a man does something which he might reasonably think proper, he is not to be held guilty of negligence, because upon review of the facts, it can be seen that the course he has adopted was not in fact the best. ——S. 151—Common carrier—Liability for goods for carriage—Demurrage charges—When leviable.

The liability of a steamship company in respect of goods delivered for carriage is that of an insurer and if there is any shortage in weight during transit, the company is liable. A consignee of goods, delivered to steamship company for carriage, cannot compel the company to weigh before delivery. He can weigh them himself and sue, for compensation for loss. even though he may have granted a clear receipt of delivery, if it is proved that a portion of the goods was lost in transit or was in the custody of the company. A consignee is liable for demurrage charges and has no right to the price of the goods if he unjustifiably refuses to take delivery of goods, But demurrage cannot be charged for the period subsequent to a notice to the consignee that the goods will be sold away at auction in case he fails to remove them. ——Ss. 151, 152, and 161—Railway Act, Ss. 72, 80—Loss of goods bailed—Liability of Ry. Co.

It is laid down definitely in S. 72 of the Indian Railways Act that the responsibility of the Railway Company for goods delivered for carriage is that of a bailee under Sections 151 152, and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. When a thing is injured or lost while in the charge of a bailee the burden of proving that he has exercised ordinary care must generally be in the first instance upon the Railway company. It is for the bailee to establish positively that they had discharged the statutory duty which is defined in Section 72 of the Railways Act read with Sections 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act. Under Ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act read with S. 72 of the Railways Act, the liability of the Railway Administration for the loss, destruction, or deterioration of goods delivered to the Administration to be carried on by railway is that of an ordinary bailee ; that is to say if the Railway Administration take as much care of the goods bailed to them as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed, they will not in the absence of special contract be respon ible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods. The Railways Act of 1890 by repealing Ss. 7 and 10 of the Carriers Act and by also enacting in S. 72, Cl. (3) that nothing in the common law of England or in the Carriers Act of 1865 regarding the responsibility of common carriers with respect to the carriage of animals or goods shall affect the responsibility of a Railway Administration, leaves no room for doubt that the liability of the Railway Company must be measured and determined solely by the tests formulated in Ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act. The onus s therefore upon the bailee to show that he is exonerated from liability for loss to the bailor by means of a special risk note relieving him from such liability. ———Ss. 178 and 108—'Possession' means juridical possession.

It has been often held that possession required in S. 178 is similar to the possession required by S. 108 of the Contract Act in regard to sales that is to say, the possession must be juridical possession of the goods and not mere custody. Where P was given possession of the sewing machines by the owner in order that he might sell them for and on behalf of the owner and he pawned the machines with a pawn broker. Held: his possession is not a mere custody for safe keeping, but for the definite purpose of sale. He would have such a possession of them as is contemplated by S 178. The fact that he disposed of the goods contrary to the instructions of the owner makes no difference to the character of the possession which vested in him. If, therefore, the pawnee acted in good faith and had no ground for doubting the authority of P to pledge the goods he would be entitled to the protection granted by S. 178. A broker is the agent of the person for whom he acts. ———S. 182—Broker—Liability of, in principal contracts—Calcutta jute market—Custom of.

There is a difference between a broker and an agent for sale. Under the custom of the Calcutta Jute Market, brokers are liable to both buyers and sellers in the case of what are called 'principal contracts." as distinguished from "direct contracts." Under the custom of the market there is a liability for the performance of the contract resting upon the brokers and a right in them to enforce the contract. It makes no difference whether at the time of the making of the contract buyers are informed of the name of the sellers and sellers of the name of the buyers. In the case of such contracts the only person to whom the sellers can really be giving credit—the only person mentioned in the contract—is the broker. Either the sellers do not know the name of the other party, or if they do and still prefer a "principal contract" they prefer the broker's credit. Consequently in the case of a breach of contract by the seller, the broker is entitled to go to arbitration on an arbitration clause of the contract. ———S. 182—Broker—Position of.

Per Woodroffe, J:—A broker is the agent of both parties and his contract is one of employment so long as he adheres strictly to his position as a broker by confining himself to the business of negotiation. But if he departs from the business of negotiation and by the terms of the contract, makes himself the agent of his principal to sell or buy, he makes a contract of sale or purchase and is liable on it. ———S. 182—Principal and Agent—Proof of relationship.

The use of the word 'agent' in a general way, loosely without specifying, the purpose of the agency does not help to determine as a matter of fact, whether a person is an agent. Whether goods were consigned to another as agent and after the goods were consigned, that other person was charged with interest, the relationship between the two was one of vendor and purchaser though the word 'agent' might have been used. Where a broker, employed to negotiate the sale of a house, finds a purchaser at the stipulated price and arranges for his brokerage to be paid by him but the transaction is not completed owing to the owner failing to convey, the broker can claim damages on the basis of the brokerage which he would have received, had the sale been completed. 30 Cal, 202 : 5 W. Unless authority to act is conferred and accepted, mere settlement of the terms of remuneration does not constitute a contract of agency. A commission agent is not in law, the agent of all persons and firms, whose business, he occasionally transacts. ——Ss. 187 and 188—Principal and agent—Power of Attorney—Construction—Money-lending business—Guarantee by agent—Liability of principal—Benefit.

Where an act purporting to be done under a power of attorney is challenged as being in excess of the authority conferred by the power, it must be shown on a fair construction of the whole instrument, that the authority in question is to be found within the four corners of the instrument, either in express terms or by necessary implication. (1893) A. C. 170. Foll. If it is established that the transaction in question is within the authority conferred by the power, the mere fact that the principal did not receive the benefit of the transaction does not rid him of liability. In the case of a Natukottai Chetty money lending business, an agent who has authority to borrow and to lend to others, has an implied authority to pledge the credit of the firm for the purpose of obtaining or securing advances from others to the customers of the firm. ———S. 190—Sub-agent—Appointment.

From the nature of the agency it was manifest that, in order that agents might sell wolfram in time of War, they would have to appoint a sub-agent in England. Apart from this, purchasers at that time would have been chary of entering into contracts with a Foreign principal, because of the difficulty of suit and other matters. Held, there was authority to appoint a sub-agent to sell the ore, and the agent did not contract to sell the ore personally. A Commission agent with instructions to sell and purchase for the principal having transacted business with himself under a fictitious name without the principal's knowledge it was held that the principal was entitled to repudiate the transactions under Ss. 211 and 215. There being a clear conflict between the agent's interests and his duty to the principal, agents should avoid positions of possible incompatibility between their personal interests and their duty to their principals. When a Commission agent's transaction with himself involves no opposition between his own interests and his duty to the principal, the transaction becomes binding on the principal, though the agent cannot claim commission in such a case. Obiter—Under the Indian Contract Act, a permission to an agent to transact for himself without the principal's consent, may be valid as a trade usage, though opposed to the provisions of the Act, but, under the corresponding English Law, the usage is illegal and cannot bind the principal unless there is proof of knowledge and consent of the principal to be bound. The death of an agent during the pendency of a suit against him for accounts does not exonerate his legal representatives from all liability to the principal. The statement of claim put in by plaintiff should be investigated preferably by a Commissioner in the presence of the representatives of the deceased agent. The onus would be on the plaintiff to prove such items in the sum which he claims, e.g., to prove that each item was actually realised by the agent and further it was not paid to his credit. The representatives of the deceased agent would be at liberty to adduce such evidence as they please to show either that the money was not realised by agent or that after realisation it was paid to the plaintiff. —— Ss. 215 and 19—Principal and agent:—Dealing by agent in the business of the agency without the knowledge of the principal—Contract is voidable at the option of principal—English and Indian law.

Plaintiff entered into a running contract with defendants for the supply, at a fixed price of a large quantity of tiles of a certain manufacture for the sale of which defendants had been appointed sole agents. It was found as a fact that the plff. was acting for and a mere alias of the dubash and local agent of the defendants who had entered into the contract without any knowledge of the fact. The defendants on becoming aware of their own agent's interest in the contract repudiated it and refused to perform it further. In an action for damages by the plaintiff. Held, that the defendants were entitled to avoid the contract both under S. 19 and under S. 215 of the Contract Act and that the plaintiff's suit was unsustainable. The concealment by the dubash and local agents of the defendants of the fact that he was dealing with them through the plaintiff was dishonest and his procuring a running contract for the supply of tiles on a large scale with the object of competing with his principals in the market which it was his duty to exploit for their benefit was prejudicial to the defendants. The case therefore satisfied S. 215 of the Contract Act. Even apart from S. 215 the dishonest concealment by the plaintiff of the identity of the contracting party constituted fraud and entitled the defendants to avoid the contract. (Schwabe, C.J. and Wallace, J.) ACHUTHA NAIDU v. MESSRS. the Official Trustee of Madras representing a company called Mysore Sugar Refining Company. The relation between the Arbuthnot and the Mysore Sugar Refining Company was this. The Mysore Sugar Refining Company was incorporated by Arbuthnot & Co. in 1905. It consisted entirely of representatives of the Arbuthnot & Co. or persons under their control. The whole of its capital came from Arbuthnot & Co. The respondents were appointed by Arbuthnot & Co. in 1901 as agents for sale of sugar in Mysore and they had also made deposits of money with Arbuthnot & Co. The respondents knew nothing whatever of the Mysore Sugar Refining Company. The Arbuthnot & Co. became insolvents in 1906. The appellant claimed to recover the proceeds of sugar manufactured by their company and sold by the respondents and claimed to do this without reference to the deposits which the respondents had made with the Arbuthnot and Company and with respect to which the respondents alleged a case of counter claim or set off. Held, that the Mysore Sugar Refining Company could not claim to recover the proceeds of sugar unless the cross claims or set off of respondent are settled and that the appellants can claim the benefit of the sums representing the sale proceeds of their sugar only subject to every equity which affects those sums in the hands of Arbuthnot & Co. themselves. A & Co. were entitled to receive from the respondents the price of sugur purporting to have been sold by the latter on their behalf. Respondents had a larger sum of money in deposit with A & Co., as bankers. A & Co., had incorporated another Company called the Mysore Company which as to personnel and otherwise was closely identified with A & Co., and completely controlled by them. Though this was technically done, the factory continued to be run and maintained in the same way as before and the respondents had no knowledge of what had happened. The Mysore Company having sued respondents for the price of sugar sold out of the factory without reference to the cross-claim and set off by the Respondents against A & Co. Held, that if the Mysore Company could bring actions for sums due from the Respondents in respect of the sales of sugar, they could bring them only as principals. In this sense they could take the benefit of these sums in the hands of A & Co. (Viscount Haldane). THE OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF MADRAS v. SUNDARAMURTHY MUDALIAR. 24 C. W. N. 1004 (P. C.)

If the outbreak of the war, while the goods are in transit on board an enemy ship, dissolving the contract of afreightment between the shipper and the ship owner, makes it impossible for the Commission Agent to do what a vendor under an ordinary c. i. f. contract, is bound to do, namely, to tender among the shipping documents-bills of lading, which are still valid contracts. ———S. 230—Broker's contract—Whether an agent is intermediary.

CONTRACT ACT (IX OF 1872), S. 230.

A broker who gives to the buyer, a note in the form "bought by your order and for your account from our principals", is no more than an intermediary, and was not an agent of the undisclosed principal for sale, to make him liable under S. 230, Contract Act. (Jenkins, C. J. a d Woodroffe, J.) PATIRAM BANERJI v. KANKINARA CO., LTD. 19 C. W. N. 623 : 31 I. C. 607 : 42 Cal. 1050.

———S. 230—Contract to the contrary. presumed where contract is made for merchant abroad.

An agent is not personally bound by a contract entered into by him on behalf of his principal in the absence of any contract to that effect. Such a contract, however, has to be presumed to exist where the contract is made by an agent for the sale or purchase of goods for a merchant resident abroad. ———S. 230—Acting for foreign principal—Liability of agent.

The presumption in S. 230 (1) of the Contract Act is a rebutable presumption which can be rebutted. But the mere fact that the principal is abroad does not absolve the personal liability of the agent if the other contracting party looked to him alone for performance. (Scott-Smith and Abdul Qadir, JJ.) FAZAL ILAHI v. THE IMPERIAL CHEMICAL CO., DELHI. 67 I, C. 157.

———S. 230—Contract by agent — Personal liability.

In order to make an agent personally liable under a contract entered into by him it must be clearly established that the agent had not disclosed the name of his principal. If, however, the name of the principal is already known to the other party to the contract who also knows that he is dealing with the agent as an agent a mere formal disclosure is clearly necessary to make the principal liable on the contract. ———S. 230—Contract by agent—No personal liability.

A man who is an agent and describes himself as such, may still be contracting in his personal capacity but the mere fact that he fails to specify his capacity, as an agent in signing a contract, does not raise any such presumption when the terms of the contract itself are clearly to the contrary. CONTRACT ACT (IX OF 1872), S. 230.

Plaintiffs purchased cotton seeds at request of a certain Ludhiana firm and sent them to defendants who accepted the goods and also wrote to plaintiffs complaining of some short weight and promising to pay price within a certain time. Meanwhile the Ludhiana firm became insolvent. In a suit by plaintiffs to recover the price from the defendants, Held, (1) that the letter of defendants did not contain an unconditional undertaking to pay for the cotton seeds; (2) that the defendants did not admit any personal liability and in the absence of proof to the contrary they must be taken to have written the letter merely as agents of the Ludhiana firm and were not therefore personally liable. Each partner is an agent for the others, and it is not necessary that the name of the firm should be so used in order to make it a partnership debt, provided it shows that the debt, was taken for and appropriated to the firm. A Hindu minor is liable to the extent of his share of the assets for debts due from the joint family firm. He is not, however, personally liable. ——Ss. 253 and 257—Partnership—Duration—Dissolution—What constitutes—Business carried on after dissolution—Liability to account.

In the absence of any term agreed upon by the parties any partner may determine the partnership at any time on giving notice of intention to do so. The dissolution takes place as from the date of the communication of the notice. If persons intending to retire from the partnership business continue to take things from the business and to associate otherwise with its work a presumption may be drawn in favour of the continuance of the partnership. The accounts on a dissolution of partnership have to be taken for the benefit of all the partners concerned and there must be a full enquiry into them irrespective of the relief sought for in the plaint. If a partner without the permission of the other partner carries on a competing business with the firm, he must account for and pay over to the firm all profits made by him in such business and also make compensation to the firm for any loss occasioned thereby. The rule is not however applicable to a different business though the same knowledge and information may be useful in both. ——S. 253—Parties—Liability of — Illegal contract.

The illegality of the partnership is no answer to a demand against it arising out of a transaction to which it is a party if the other person was not aware of it. If a business is carried on by two partners and is legal only so far as one is concerned, the presumption is that he has benefited by one half of the loan and a decree should be given against that partner only for half the amount, borrowed by the partnership. In case of ordinary partnerships, where the terms are embodied in documents which purport to follow the ordinary laws governing the relation between the partners every partner is prima facie entitled to an interest in the goodwill. But in the peculiar kind of partnership, well known in this presidency where the Ejman or proprietor of the firm takes in what are called working partners, who ordinarily begin by putting in no capital but who as the business goes on, put in the profits earned in the business itself, as part of the capital, the presumption to be made is that the working partner has no interest in the good-will until the contrary is shown. ——S. 253—Acquisitions—Land purchased with partnership funds—Ownership.

Land purchased by partners in a trading concern out of partnership fund does not of necessity become partnership property. Whether they hold such land as co-owners or as partners depends upon the purpose for which it is purchased. ——S. 253 (4)— Liability of partners for negligence.

If a partner fall into an error in the management from want of a larger measure of prudence and skill than he is master of, he is not liable for the consequences. In the absence of any specific agreement to the contrary, the rule of diligence among partners is not that they should employ the middle kind of diligence which prudent men employ in their affairs, but that they are safe if they show they acted in the partnership affairs as they would have acted in their own. Good faith is required in a partner as well as diligence and if a partner is guilty of gross negligence, unskillfulness, fraud, or wanton misconduct in the course of the partnership business, he is ordinarily responsible to the other partners for the losses and damages sustained hereby. *Law v. S. 253 (7) and (10) are subject to the qualification, viz; "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" which may be made expressly or by conduct. The stoppage of business or refusal to supply capital by a partner cannot be treated as a dissolution of the firm. The question whether there has been an abandonment depends upon the facts of each case. An infant inheriting his father's share in the partnership is liable for his father's personal liabilities only to the extent of the assets inherited by him and as regards the liabilities of the firm since the death of the father the minor is not personally liable but his share only is liable (Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ.) HARAMOHAN PODDAR v. SUDARSON. 66 I. ——S. 254 (5)—Partnership— Dissolution—Misconduct.

A partner guilty of misconduct cannot sue for dissolution of the partnership or for any other relief. The law is the same on this point as in England. Partner who either destroys the old account books of the firm, makes such interpolations in the account books which make them worthless and unreliable, falsely prepares the balance sheet or tries to deprive his firm of a valuable asset is guilty of misconduct. CONTRACT ACT (IX OF 1872), S. 261.

——Ss. 254 (6) and 252—Partnership for a fixed term—Suit for dissolution—Discretion of Court to grant decree—Appellate Court if can interfere.

A partner's claim to a decree for dissolution rests in its origin, not on contract, but on his inherent right to invoke the Court's protection on equitable grounds, in spite of the terms in which the rights and obligations of the partners may have been regulated and defined by the partnership contract. When it is established that the partnership business cannot be continued without a loss the Court has jurisdiction to order its dissolution though under the contract between the parties the partnership is not terminable at the date of suit. It is opposed to sound practice for an Appellate Court to substitute its discretion for that of the Court, from which an appeal has been preferred. ——S. 258—Partnership—Contribution.

All partners must be joined in a suit for contribution by one or more partners if partnership has come to an end and no adjustment has been made. Plaintiff in possession of accounts or property must give credit to the defendant for his profit even though the claim be barred by time. "He who seeks equity must do equity" must be acted upon. (Broadway, J.) KALAMAL v. SOHARA MAL. 113 P. W. R. 1916 : 35 I. C. 910 : 42 P. L. R. 1917.

——Ss 261 and 262—Partnership—Death of partner—Liability of heirs.

The personal representative of a deceased partner is bound to give an account of what has been received on behalf of the partnership, but he will be only liable for the person he represents to the extent of the assets he receives. The fact that a minor representative is personally unable to give the accounts will not absolve him from the obligation of getting the accounts prepared by persons who were conversant with what took place and what money was received and spent and who were acting either for the deceased partner during his life or for the minor and the estate of the partner after his death. A suit by the surviving partner against the minor for excess amounts received by his father is maintainable. (Richards, C. J. and Banerji, J.) SHANKAR LAL v. RAM BABU. 40 All. 446: 45 I. ———S. 262—Property of partnership—Right to dispose of—Rights of creditors.

Although partnership property has annexed to it a paramount liability for partnership debts, yet there is nothing in law which prevents partners from disposing of it as they like or allowing it to be treated as the sole property of one partner and obliges them to preserve it as partnership property for the benefit of the creditors of the partnership. Any disposition of the property by the agreement of the partners is effective unless made with a view to defraud the creditor, and the creditor is not entitled to be consulted in the matter. ———S. 263—Partnership— Dissolution— Accounts—Partner retaining and using assets—Liability to pay interest.

It is well settled that, in certain cases, when on the dissolution of a firm one of the partners retains assets of the firm in his hands without any settlement of accounts and applies them in continuing the business for his benefit he may be ordered to account for these assets with interest thereon, even in the absence of fraud or misconduct in the nature of fraud. ———S. 263—Partnership—Reference to arbitration—Legal representatives, when bound.

The question whether the legal personal representatives of a deceased partner were bound by a reference to arbitration by the surviving partners in relation to a partnership contract is not a pure question of law to be decided without reference to the facts of the case. The High Court was in error in permitting the question to be raised for the first time in appeal. The partnership contract which was not in evidence, might have contained a submission binding on the representative; even if it did not, and the agreement to refer was not originally binding, it might have become binding on them by their acquiescence therein or their acceptance of benefits thereunder. One of the conditions of the partnership in respect of Mill business was that cash was to be supplied by one of the partners and the profits were to be distributed in certain proportions. A suit for dissolution of partnership was instituted. And while this was pending, the plaintiff purchased the right, title and interest of one of the partners who was originally the owner of the Mill and subsequently sued the members of the partnership firm for recovery of damages for use and occupation of the Mill. Held that whether the Mill became part of partnership assets by the deed of partnership or continued to be the private property, the plaintiff's suit was in either case not maintainable. ———S. 264—"Persons dealing with a firm" —Meaning of Scope of—Estoppel.

The expression "persons dealing with a firm" indicates only such persons who have been in the habit of dealing with the firm previously. The section does not contemplate such persons who deal with a firm for the first time after the retirement of some of the partners. S. 264 is an illustration of a particular form of estoppel by conduct and a person is not entitled to take advantage of it unless the facts raise a presumption that the absence of notice excited in him a belief which caused him to do something that he would not otherwise have done. The section must not be construed as an absolute proposition of law, but must be read with S. 115 of the Evidence Act. (Scott-Smith and Abdul Raoof, JJ.) BICHHIA LAL v. MUNSHI RAM. 68 I. CONTRIBUTION— Cause of action.

Basis of Claim.

———Basis of claim—Suit for—Scope of enquiry.

In a contribution suit the basis is payment in excess of the plff.'s liability. The plff.'s liability has to be ascertained, and to avoid multiplicity of suits the respective shares of the contributors must be ascertained. ———Cause of action—Satisfaction of decree by one of several judgment-debtors—Liability of others.

One of the defts. who had since the decree acquired four-fifths of the properties charged, paid off the decree amount and then sued the other defts. for contribution. Held, it was unnecessary for the plff. to pay off the decretal debt or any part of it and the claim for contribution could not succeed. ———Co-sharers—Extent of liability of each sharer—Decree, form of.

The right of contribution has its foundation in and is controlled by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. It does not arise from the contract although it has sometimes been based on the theory of an implied contract for contribution supposed to exist between parties jointly liable ex contractu. Each co-obligor is liable to contribute only in proportion to his share of the common debt or obligation. If a sharer has paid more than his share of the common liability, he is not bound to contribute any thing more. In a suit for contribution the liabilities of the different parties i. e. plaintiffs and the defendants, must be separately ascertained and a joint decree cannot be made in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants. Deft. claimed set off of ¼ share of the collections. Plff. contended that his collections did not exceed his share. Held where the collections were not made expressly as the plff's share from each tenant, they must be deemed to have been made on behalf of all owners and the deft. is entitled to a set-off. Costs.

———Costs — Co-defendants—Joint decree—Effect of.

Where two or more persons join in an attack or in a common defence in an action, there is at least an implied contract that they will share the gain or the loss. At any rate equity will infer such a contract and there is a prima facie right of contribution among the litigants so joining in an attack or defence. But it may happen that the defendants to a suit may have different antagonistic and exclusive defences and in such a case in the absence of a contract or some equity between them there will be no contribution. Cases on the subject reviewed (Ryves and Stuart, JJ.) PARSOTTAM DAS KOLAPURI v. LACHMI NARAIN. 45 A. 99 : 69 I. C. 688 : 20 A. L. J. 890 : 1923 A. 67.

———Costs — Co-plaintiffs—Contribution as between.

The rules governing the question of contribution between co defendants do not necessarily apply to co-plaintiffs. Where persons under a bona fide claim of right, sued to substantiate that right, but the suit was ultimately dismissed for default and costs were awarded against the plaintiff, Held that a suit brought by one of them who paid the whole of the costs for contribution against his co-plaintiffs was maintainable. ——Costs—False suit by plff.

A co-plff. who conspired with the other plff. and brought a false suit on a mortgage bond, which was dismissed, and who was made to pay the entire costs, was not entitled to maintain a suit for contribution against the other plff. Institution of a false suit is doing an illegal or unlawful act, and the rule of non-contribution among joint tort-feasors is not limited to tortious acts only. ———Joint tort-feasors.

A plaintiff suing for contribution must show some equity in his favour if he was a joint tort-feasor with the deft. (exempla gratia) in the case of a trespass on deft.'s land, no right to compensation or contribution arises. (Kumaraswami Sastri, J.) KOPPANA CHELAMIAH v. DATLA SURYANARAYANA. 37 M. L. J. 346: 26 M. L. T. 368: 10 L. W. 261: 53 I. C. 77: (1920) M. W. N. 265.

———Joint-tort-feasors — No contribution — Scope of the rule.

To defeat a claim for contribution among co-defts. it must be shown that the defts. in the former suit were wrong-doers in the sense that they knew or ought to have known that they were doing an illegal and wrongful act. In that case no suit for contribution would lie. But, on the other hand, if the defts, in the former suit were not guilty of a wrong in that sense, but acted under a bona fide claim of right, and had reason to suppose that they had a right to do what they did then, no doubt, they might have a right of contribution inter se. ———Joint tort-feasors—Costs— Liability of other defts. for contribution.

The rule of non-contribution between joint tort feasors exist in India but it applies in cases where the parties are wrong-doers in the sense that they knew or ought to have known that they were doing an illegal or wrongful act. 7 W. R. 384, Ref. The setting up of a defence to a suit which the defts. in that suit knew, could not be substantiated in fact if it is not followed up by the production of perjured evidence, is a legitimate act and a right of contribution exist in cases where one deft. had to pay entire costs awarded against the defts. in such an action. 13 Cal. 800 and 26 Mad. 373 Ref. Partners.

———Partners—Decree against—One partner paying off—Suit by.

One partner who is compelled to pay off a decree against all the members of a partnership can maintain a suit for contribution against the other partners, but it is open to the latter to show that on proper accounts being taken, nothing is due to the former, 9 B.H. C. R. 39, Dist; 52 Mad. 203, Rel on. (Tudball, J.) LALARAM v. SHIO PRASAD. 20 I. C. 176: 11 A. L. J. 657.

CONTRIBUTION—Miscellaneous.

———Partners—Liability of co-partners for debt.

Though partners are jointly liable to third persons, a partner who pays more than his share of the partnership debt whether voluntarily or not, is entitled to contribution from his co-partners. Where advances are made by one partner not to the partnership concerned, but to other partners in respect of what he has to contribute to the joint capital, he can sue the other partners for contribution. (Asutosh Mukerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) LABAN SARDAR v. CHOYEN MALLICK. 29 I. C. 811: 19 C. W. N. 768.

———Partners—Suit, when maintainable—Dismissal of.

The general rule is that one partner cannot sue another except for a dissolution and the taking of the general accounts of the partnership. The Court is right in dismissing a suit for contribution by an assignee from a partner who had paid off a decree against the partnership. (Sadasiva Aiyar, J.) DAMODARA SHANBHAGA v. SUBRAYA PAI. 33 M. L. J. 509: 43 I. C. 217: 6 L. W. 742.

———Partners—Joint debt paid by one.

In the case of a dissolved partnership a suit for contribution is maintainable by a partner who has paid the whole of the debt. 32 Mad, 203, Foll. In such a case it would be open to the deft. to show that nothing was really due to the plaintiff according to the accounts of the partnership as they stood. (Sundara Aiyar, J.) GUDLAVELLARU VENKATARATNAM v. VELLA THAMBI VENKATARATNAM. 11 M. L. T. 188: 15 I. C. 218: (1912) M. W. N. 384.

Miscellaneous.

———Co-judgment-debtors—Extent of liability inter se—Proof of.

In a suit for a contribution as between co-judgment debtors the latter may show the extent of their liability, and the decree in the prior suit does not operate as res-judicata in this respect. (Ryves and Gokul Prasad, JJ.) ITWARI LAL v. MATA PRASAD. L. R. 3 A. 425.

———Co-judgment-debtors—Payment by one—Creditor's right—Contribution.

A payment by one judgment-debtor more than his share gives him no charge on the property of his co-judgment-debtor, but his right is to get simple money contribution. (Richards, C. J. and Rafique, J.) BINDESHRI PERSHAD CHAND v. GIRDHARDAS. 34 I. C. 91.

———Decree, form of.

In a suit for contribution, the Court ought to determine the amount of liability of each defendant and make a decree apportioning to each of them the amount for which he is found to be liable. A joint decree is clearly erroneous. As between debtors, each of them is liable for so much of the debt as he has not paid to the creditor and as the plaintiff had paid for him. (Banerji, J.) SHEO PRASAD v. LALA RAM. 29 I. C. 205.

CONTRIBUTION—Miscellaneous.

S. the mortgagor died leaving two daughters, a brother and an illegitimate son. A, the mortgagee assigned his mortgagee's right to the plff's. the sons of S's brother. Plff. sued on the mortgage and obtained a separate decree against each of the heirs for the proportionate liability. R. one of the two daughters of S, then brought a separate suit and had the decree set aside as against her. The plffs. then, brought a second suit to recover the proportionate part of the mortgage-debt from R's share of the mortgaged property. Held, that plffs. had a right to recover the portion of the mortgage money even from R. (*Richards, C. ——— Evidence—Joint decree—Judgment—Admissibility of.

Where the basis of a suit for contribution is a judgment against the plaintiff. and the deft. acted as defts. in the prior suit, the judgment in that suit is admissible in contribution suit. The propriety of the conclusion reached in the former judgment cannot be attacked but it may be used to show that the deft. was not jointly liable. ———Defence—Joint decree against plaintiff and defendants—Payment by plaintiff—Exaggerated claim—If ground for dismissing the suit.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff for the money he paid to satisfy a decree under which both the plaintiff and the defendant were jointly liable, no defence can be raised that the decree should not have been joint. In a suit for contribution by one of the judgment-debtors, the plaintiff the only defence is as to the extent of liability and the suit could not be dismissed though the claim is exaggerated. (Seshagiri Aiyar, J.) SAMBASIVA AIYAR v. SUBRAMANIA AIYAR. 4 L. W. 260 : 36 I. C. 576 : (1916) 2 M. W. N. 214.

———Joint promisors—Claim barred against one.

A joint promisor, whose liability to the promissee, is kept alive beyond the ordinary period of limitation and who is consequently compelled to pay by a decree of Court, more than his proportion of the debt to the promissee, can sue his joint promissors for contribution though the decree exonerated them from payment, on the ground that the debt was as against them barred by limitation. Per Tyabji, J.—The duty to contribute is clearly distinct from the duty to pay to the promissee. The first is to the promissor, the second is to the promissee. The right of each joint promissor to claim indemnity does not consist merely of being subrogated to the right of the original promissee for though promissee's rights may have been released, the responsibility to the joint promissor is not annulled. ——— Joint decree—Mortgagee's suit to enforce mortgage—Rights of mortgagor and subsequent transferees impleaded as defendants.

A decree may often be prima facie evidence of common liability as co-obligors between the persons against whom it is passed. But whereas in the case of a suit by a mortgagee to enforce the mortgage the mortgagors and their subsequent transferees are merely impleaded as defendants to give them a right to redeem it is not evidence of the rights of the defendants inter se. The liability to pay a debt due on a simple mortgage is as between the mortgagor and his subsequent mortgagee or lessee primarily on the former and if the mortgagor or lessee pays that debt he cannot claim contribution in respect of that payment from his mortgagee or lessee. The position of the heir of a mortgagor is in this respect in no way better than that of the person to whom he succeeds. (*Kanhaiya Lal, J. C. and Daniels, A. J. ———Member—Expulsion of, from Committee—Rules of natural justice.

The Committee before expelling a member must make a fair enquiry into the truth of the alleged facts, after giving him notice that his conduct is about to be enquired into and giving him an opportunity of defending himself. To determine whether a tribunal, exercising a punitive jurisdiction on an alleged charge of misconduct, whereby a man may be deprived of his property, has given a sound decision, the Court has to investigate whether they have observed the rules of natuaral justice and the particular statutory or other rules, if any prescribed for their guidance. The rules of natural justice demand that a man is not to be removed from office or membership or otherwise dealt with, to his disadvantage without having an opportunity of making his defence, and that the decision must be arrived at in good faith with a view to the common interest of the institution concerned. And a Court of Justice will not interfere with their decision if the above conditions are satisfied. (Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ.) MAHOMED KALIMUDDIN v. A. B STEWART.

Whatever the powers of the Court may be in adjudicating on the rights of parties and in passing injunction (or conditional injunctions) in consequence of such adjudications it is a different matter to say that where a party admittedly owns a piece of property the Court has any authority to create and impose conditions as to the enjoyment of the same, neither breach of contract nor the infringement of any right being alleged to have taken place. Consequently a co-sharer who had rebuilt at his expense a common wall belonging to him and the defendant, another co-sharer, cannot obtain an injunction restraining the latter from treating the half belonging to him as his property until he had paid his portion of the cost of re-building the wall. ———Exclusive possession—Ouster—Tenant in common in occupation of portion of joint property—Liability to account.

Each joint owner has the right to the possession of all the property held in common, equal to the right of each of his companions in interest and superior to that of all other persons. He has the same right to the use and enjoyment of the common property, that he has to his sole property except to so far as it is limited by the equal rights of his co-sharers. But the owner out of possession cannot complain of the mere possession of the co-owner, so long as he refrains from setting any claim to share in that possession. Hence in order to give rise to a cause of action against the co-sharer, it must be proved that his act had amounted to ouster or disseizin. Where there is an actual turning out or excluding out of the party entitled to the possession, there is an ouster. Any resistance preventing a co-sharer from obtaining effective possession is an actual ouster. A tenant cannot be held liable to his co tenant for damages for use and occupation of the joint property unless there has been waste or ouster, 42 Cal. 837, Ref. Lambardar.

——— Lambardar—Dues payable to—Agreement between co-sharers—Effect.

In a suit by a lambardar against the co-sharers for the recovery of lambardari dues, the defence was that the co-sharers made collections themselves and paid revenue of their respective shares and that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz of 1285 fasli the lambardar of the village was not entitled to any remuneration. At the settlement of 1285 fasli before the Board of Revenue had issued the rules under the U. P. Land Rev. Act there was an agreement between the co-sharers that the lambardar should receive no remuneration. At a subsequent settlement in 1312 Fasli the plaintiff lambardar contended that this agreement was abrogated. There was no evidence that it had been abrogated or reaffirmed. Held, that if the co-sharers as a body desired to contract themselves out of the rule framed by the Board of Revenue, they ought to have agreed upon some nominal remuneration for the lambardar. The lambardar is placed in a strong position ; he can bargain with the co-sharers for some reasonable remuneration, under threat of standing upon his extreme rights and claiming his full 5 per cent. on the land revenue. The agreement relied upon by the defendants (co-sharers) even if it survived the enactment of the Board of Revenue's Rules came to an end automatically at the close

In a suit by co-sharers against lambardar for profits, the burden of proving amount of arrears lies on the lambardar. (Prideaux, A. J. C.) SARJE RAO v. HARAK CHAND. 6 N. L. J. 234 : 1923 Nag. 287.

——— Lambardar — Lease — Lambardar's authority to give.

A lease granted by the Lambardar of a village and impliedly consented to by his co-sharer is binding on the co-sharer. The position of a Lambardar with reference to his co-sharer in the matter of letting out vacant land cannot well be put higher than that of a Manager of the joint property of a Hindu family. (Droke-Brockman, J. C.) KUNJILAL v. C. CHANDARSINGH. 64 I. C. 775 : 17 N. L. R. 169.

——— Lambardar—Imperfect partition—Lambardar's authority.

In an imperfect partition, the lambardar's representative authority is at an end except in relation with the Government. A lease of lao patera by a lambardar is not binding on the co-sharers. (Mitra, A. J. C.) HARIPHAJAN v. ZAHARAN BI. 57 I. C. 318.

——— Lambardar—Position of.

As between a lambardar and a person jointly interested with others in a patti, there is no such privity of contract as would entitle the latter to treat the former as his agent in respect of the item in his hands. (Mitra, Offg. J. C.) HARIDAS CHATTERJI v. GAHENABAI. 56 I. C. 761.

——— Lambardar— Power to lease vacant lands—Consent.

A provision in a wajib-ul-arz of a village that the lambardar should consult the wishes of the co-sharers of the village does not mean that the consent of the co-sharers should be obtained to a lease. The general rule in the Central Provinces is that the lambardar leases the vacant lands in the ordinary course of management. The mere fact that the co sharers are not consulted does not entitle them to avoid bona fide lease. (Mitra, A. J. C.) HARI PRASAD v. GOVINDA RAO. 54 I. C. 634.

——— Lambardar—Profits—Interest--Liability to account—Onus.

The burden of proving by prima facie evidence the actual receipts of profits, lies on the co-sharer suing the lambardar for his share of the profits. Interest ought not to be allowed except in special circumstances on the profits claimed by the co-sharer, since the relation between the parties is not of debtor and creditor. The co sharer must prove a demand and refusal before claiming interest. (Batten, A. J. C.) GOPALA KUNBI v. RAM KRISHNAPURI. 50 I. C. 930 : 15 N. L. R, 85.

——— Lambardar— Wajib-ul-arz.

A co-sharer cannot avoid a lease created by a lambardar he being generally empowered to create lease with the consultation of his co sharer by an entry in the wajib-ul-arz. His remedy is to sue for damages against the lambardar, or his removal from office or by claiming partition. (Stanyon, A. J. C.) POONAMCHAND v. NANDLAL. 48 I. C. 72.

——— Lambardar—Authority of—Suit for partition instituted—Effect of.

The mere institution of partition proceedings by a co-sharer against a lambardar does not of itself put an end to the authority of the lambardar to lease out waste land. The absence of consultation by the lambardar with his co-sharers in the matter of leasing out waste lands does not affect the position of a stranger taking the lease in good faith. (Mitra, A. J. C.) FACKIRGIR v. MULCHAND. 43 I. C. 934 : 14 N. L. R 18.

——— Lambardar—Power of—Lease of Banjar—Right of co-sharers—Fraud of lambardar.

As a rule, the lambardar cannot lease Banjar land without the consent of the whole proprietary body. But if the lease does not injuriously affect the interests of the body or villagers and is on the contrary beneficial to both, it will not be set aside at the request of a co-sharer who stood by and allowed the lessee to spend money in reclaiming the land. It would be unfair to view a new tenancy of this nature in the same light as one which seriously curtails the villager's rights of grazing and nistar and is prejudicial to them. The lambardar's power to act on behalf of the whole body of landlords in relation to an act done in their interests must be treated differently from a fraudulent one. 2 C. P. L. R. 106, Ref. ———Lambardar—Agent—Custom.

The practice of appointing a lambardar is so universal that a presumption arises that a lambardar is the agent of the proprietary body in every village unless the contrary is shown. But the presumption does not extend to the case of a minor lambardar nor to that of his guardian. (Halifax, A. J. C.) HAIJNATH v. RAGHUNATH. 26 I. C. 608 : 10 N. L. R. 93.

———Lambardar—Suit for profits—Liability of heirs of Lambardar.

A lambardar is under a duty to take reasonable care in collecting the rents and the liability incurred by the failure to perform that duty survives after his death. The heirs of the deceased lambardar are liable to the extent of the assets of their deceased father which have come into their hands for the co-sharer's share of the profits which might with reasonable care have been collected. Where the difference between the gross rental and the collections is very great, there is a presumption either of dishonesty or of gross negligence on the part of the deceased lambardar and the burden is on his heirs to rebut that presumption. ——Lambardar—Power of—Grant of long leases.

Under exceptional circumstances it is competent to a lambardar in the exercise of his powers as a manager to grant leases for a longer term than what the requirements of the particular year or season may necessitate if he thereby secures the largest amount of benefit to the co-sharers by saving the property from sale. ——Lambardar—Lease perpetual—Acquiescence—Effect of.

The granting of a perpetual lease is beyond the competence of a Lambardar acting on behalf of the entire body of co-sharers, in the absence of a special custom to the contrary. CO-SHARER—Mutual relation.

———Mutual relation—Suit between, for use, and occupation.

A suit by one co-owner against another will not lie simply for use and occupation. (Fox, C J. and Parlett, J) SWAN TEE v. MA NGWE.
32 I. C. 630 : 9 Bur. L. T. 69.

———Mutual relation.

It is common enough to find one or more co-heirs acting on behalf of the general body of co-heirs. (Twomey, J.) SUBRAMANIAM CHETTY v. MAUNG SHUE THE. 11 I. C. 781 : 4 Bur. L. T. 163.

Partition.

———Partition—Suit for, by one member—Other co-sharers necessary parties.

In a suit for partition by one co-sharer the other co-sharers are necessary parties and the decree in the suit is binding on them. A subsequent suit for partition by one of the co-sharers who was a party to the previous suit is barred by res judicata. (Lord Moulton.) NALINI KANTA LAHIRI v. SARNAMOYI DEBYA.

———Partition.

If a co-sharer files a suit within 12 years from the date of the partition for the removal of the trees allotted to one co-sharer and standing on the land allotted to another co-sharer, he is entitled to have the same removed and the land vacated. (Kanhaiya Lal, J.) NIAMAT ULLAH v SA-UT-UN NISSA BIBI. L. R. 4 A. 314 (Rev.) : 1924 A. 160.

———Partition—Properties omitted in preliminary decree—Power of court to add.

Ordinarily a suit for enforcing partition of some only of the common property will not lie, if however by mistake, fraud or some other reason, some properties are left out, any of the co-owners can apply to have them divided. So also, even after preliminary decree, a court may direct discovery of properties still remaining joint and pass preliminary decrees in respect thereof. ———Partition—Right to—Defence—Acquisition of subordinate interest.

Where two persons are in joint possession as joint owners, entitled to claim partition against another it is no valid answer to a claim for a partition by one that the other has acquired a subordinate interest over the whole property.

Property held in co-tenancy may be partitioned by suit and the only essential is that the property must be held in co-tenancy. (Mookerjee and Richardson, JJ.) KALI CHURN v. MOHANANDA DUTTA. 29 I. C. 467.

———Partition, suit for—Shamilat—Cultivation of part of common land by one sharer—Remedy of others.

Where a co-sharer cultivated a part of the common land, the other co-sharers are entitled to apply for partition but are not entitled to an injunction restraining the co-sharer from cultivating the land. A fact that a fair is held on the land every year when the land is free from crop and it is reserved for camps of officers on tour, does not affect the matter. (Rattigan, C. J.) AHMAD v. SUNDER SINGH. 51 I. C. 567 : 36 P. L. R. 1919.

———Partition.

A co-sharer by taking possession of half the land without the consent of his co-sharer cannot compel him to accept the other half as his share. (Mitra, A. J. C.) SADOO v. GANJI. 57 I. C. 495.

———Partition—Landlord and tenant—Surrender of tenancy to one co-sharer—Suit for possession.

Plaintiffs and defendant were co sharers in a village. Defendant took a surrender of tenancy lands. The other co-sharers gave notice to vacate their shares. No mention was made in the notice about contributing to the defendants for their share of the cost of acquisition of surrender. Two years after the notice pffs. filed a suit for joint possession with defendant. Held, that there had been unreasonable delay in instituting the suit. As the notice was simply of a threatening nature not making any mention of the intention to contribute to the costs of acquisition, the suit should be dismissed. Plaintiff's remedy was held to be a suit for partition. (Batten, A. J. C.) BAPU v. SITTI. 45 I C. 902.

———Partition—Collection of rents and payments of revenue by each co-sharer—Liability to profits.

Under private partition in a village each co-sharer collected profits to the extent of his share and paid revenue separately. Held there can, between the co-sharers, be no liability for profits so long as this arrangement remains in force. Right against trespasser.

Where a co-sharer suing for exclusive possession of a plot of land proves that it was his khudkasht and the defendant trespassed upon the property and dispossessed him, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree and he could not be driven to a suit for partition in the revenue court. ———Rights against trespasser—Suit by one joint owner—Other co-owners made defts.--Decree, form of.

In a suit against a trespasser by one joint owner where the other joint owners are made defts. on the ground that they would not join as plffs. the decree should be one for possession in favour of the plff. on his own behalf and on behalf of his co-owners to the extent of their respective shares. ———Rights against trespasser— Ejectment by co-sharer landlord— Trespasser—Tenant—Effect.

A co-sharer landlord cannot by himself sue to eject a tenant ; but he can so sue a trespasser such as a transferee of a non-transferable holding. (Coxe, J.) GANODANNESSA BIBI v. MAKSEDANNESSA BIBI. 11 I. C. 84.

The principle that in a suit for the ejectment of a tenant from a joint holding all the co-sharers must act jointly or obtain partition is not applicable, where the defendant is not a tenant but a trespasser. (Moti Sagar, J.) LEKHA v. BHANI. 1923 Lah. 647.

———Right against trespasser — Shamilat land—Encroachments.

Where the land encroached upon had been reserved for the common purposes of the village body and in consequence of the encroachments there is hardly sufficient space left on the spot for the common purposes of the village body. Held, a decree can be passed for restoration of the land to its original use as there will be no exclusion of the defendants from joint possession of a legitimate character. 2 Lah. 73, Foll. (Campbell, J.) PASAWA SINGH v. AMAR CHAND. 1923 Lah. 308 (2).

In a suit by one of the co-sharer landlords for ejectment of the defendant who was found to be a trespasser, the court can pass a decree only for the plff.'s share. (Brasher, J.) DIPA v. LAL CHAND. 49 P. L. R. 1922 : 68 I. C. 428 : 1922 Lah. 393.

CO-SHARER—Right to alienate.

The right of a tenant-in-common to recover the whole property as against a trespasser is a right which he is entitled to assert, only on behalf of himself and his co-tenants. He cannot do so in the assertion of right in himself to the whole property. 21 M. L. J. 997; 9 C. L. J. 623, Ref. A tenant in-common is not bound to make a claim on behalf of his co-tenants. ———Right against trespasser—Ejectment—Tenant—Trespasser.

No co-sharer landlord singly can eject a tenant unless he represents the other co-sharers, but the case of a trespasser is different. A man inducted into the land by a co-sharer and who remains therein for many years is prima facie a tenant. (Stanyon, A. J. C.) DHANOOLAL v. RAMLAL. 45 I. C. 496.

A person wrongfully dispossessed from property is entitled to sue for its possession. It is not a defence to the suit that the plff. is not the sole owner of the property. (Mitra, A. J. C.) BHAGWANSA v. MAROTI. 43 I. C. 395.

———Right against trespasser—Ejectment—Suit to be brought only by the entire body of co-sharer landlords.

If a lambardar co sharer landlord seeks to maintain such suit, he can do so only as the agent of the whole body. The institution of a suit for ejectment against a purchaser is not one of the duties which a lambardar has to perform as the representative of the landlords. A lambardar has no power to eject trespassers or tenants. 37 Cal. 694, Ref. (Mullick and Atkinson, JJ.) TRILOCHAN PANDA v. DINAPANDHU PANDA. 44 I. C. 317 : 3 P. L. J. 88.

Right to alienate.

———Right to alienate—Mortgage of undivided share by co-sharer—Subsequent partition—Mortgage property allotted to another.

In the case of a mortgage of an undivided share in the joint property, the mortgagee cannot follow his security into the hands of a co-sharer of the mortgagor who has obtained the mortgaged share upon partition. The mortgage lien is transferred to the portion of the joint property obtained by mortgagor at the partition. Where the final decree for partition was passed after a decree for sale of the mortgaged share had been passed in favour of the mortgagee but before the actual auction sale, the mortgaged share which had ceased to be the property of the mortgagor could not be sold under the decree and that decree could not affect the interests obtained by the co-sharer under partition. If a mortgagee before he obtains a decree for sale has to submit to a substitution of the mortgaged property effected by partition, he must also do the same even after his decree, unless the sale has already taken place before the partition. CO-SHARER--Right to alienate.

——Right to alienate—Mortgagee's rights—Mortgage by co-sharers—Fraudulent partition.

If the co sharers fraudulently exchange lands in partition, the mortgagee has rights to the undivided share of his mortgagor. (Ryves and Gokul Prasad, JJ.) NANU v. MATHURA PRASAD.

Co-sharers in an undivided property may by arrangement among themselves take possession of definite portions of that property and hold them so as to enjoy their proper share of the profits. But a co-sharer cannot alienate, to a third person, as his exclusive property, the portion which he has been occupying by agreement with his co-sharers. (Lindsay, J.) JAMNA v. JHALLI.
55 I. C 94 : 18 A. L. J. 129.

——Right to alienate— Sale — Proprietary rights, sale of—Ex-proprietary tenant.

Where his proprietary right is sold by a co-sharer in a patti, he becomes, in respect of his sir, an ex-proprietary tenant of all the co-sharers in the patti, including the purchaser of his share. ——Right to alienate— Co-sharer — When liable to be ejected.

A co-owner cannot be ejected from joint property at the instance of his co-sharer unless his act amounts to an ouster; so where one co-owner dealt, with the joint property and alienated it to a stranger who claimed the property in denial of the rights of the co-owners, then the act is hostile to them and they were entitled to recover possession of their share. 11 C. ——Right to alienate—Lease—Permanent lease by majority—When binding—Suit to set aside by minority—Form of decree.

It is not competent to a majority of co-sharers to grant a permanent lease of common land so as to bind the minority except in cases of unavoidable necessity or obvious benefit to the whole body of co-sharers or a valid custom to that effect. Where a permanent lease so granted by the majority is sought to be set aside by the minority of the co-sharers and it is found that the transaction is not binding on the latter, the proper decree to be passed is one for possession in favour of the plaintiffs for themselves and on behalf of the other co-sharers. ———Landlords—Purchase of occupancy holding by one—Purchaser, if settled raiyat.

Where a co-sharer landlord acquires the occupancy right of a raiyat, he holds the raiyat's interest without the right of occupancy. ———Mines—Accounts—Working by one co-sharer—Money spent on mine—Partition—Equities.

In the absence of proof of actual ouster or destruction of property one co-sharer cannot demand accounts from another co sharer for minerals taken by him out of the joint property unless he had shown that he had worked more than his fair share. No claim for account is maintainable where the co-sharer knowing that the other co-sharer had been spending large sums of money to develop the mines acquiesced. His remedy is by a suit for partition in which case the other co sharer should, if possible, be maintained in possession of the portion of the property upon which he has spent money. ———Shamilat land—Abandonment—Sale of Khewat.

Rights in Shamilat lands are independent rights. A sale of a khewat holding without any reference to the Shamilat would not result in the conveyance of the Shamilat. The question whether rights in the Shamilat had been abandoned after the sale of Khewat, is one of fact and the High Court is bound by the finding of the lower appellate Court. ———Shamilat—Suit for declaration—Shamilat deh recorded as Shamilat taraf—Acquisition by Government.

Plffs. sued for a declaration of ownership of a share of the village shamilat. The suit land was entered as a shamilat deh in settlements of 1856, 1868. 1891 and 1892 but in 1893 the land was shown as shamilat of taraf Bedi—one of the 3 tarafs in the village. Portions of the land having been acquired by the Government in 1906 and again in 1911 compensation money was taken by the Bedis. Held, that the old entries being all in plff.'s favour, the admission of Bedis meant nothing more than that the bedis should continue to manage the land taking whatever income might accrue and incurring whatever expense might occur. The action of the Bedis in 1911 in taking all the compensation money was a fresh invasion of the plffs'. rights and the suit was, therefore, within time. ———Rent—Collection of—Liable to be distributed proportionately.

The plff. sued the deft. to recover his share of the Peishcush they had paid on the Mitta which they two owned in common the defts.' share being one-fourth. The defence was that a fourth of the amount collected by the plff. as rent was due from him. The p'ff. contended that the collection amounted to his share and did not exceed it. Held that the plff. ought to be deemed to have collected the rent on behalf of all the owners and so it ought to be proportionately distributed.

Where for the purpose of supporting the decree dismissing plaintiff's claim on any ground, even on a ground other than that taken by the Court of first instance, respondents filed a petition stating the reasons on which they supported the decree, it does not amount to cross-objections for which an ad valorem court-fee was payable. ——Determination of amount—Duty of Court—Suit for declaration that decree is not binding.

To determine the amount to be paid as Court-fee, the Court has got to look at and see in each particular case what is the nature of the relief claimed and for that purpose it must look at the allegations that are contained in the plaint. The Court-fee payable in a suit for a declaration that a certain ex parte decree is not binding on the plaintiff, is Rs. 10 ; and not an ad valorem Court-fee on the amount of the decree sought to be declared invalid. In a suit instituted for a declaration that an entry in furd rewaz is wrong and may be corrected, where the defendants belonged to different castes and followed different occupation and the rents payable by them differed. Accordingly, held that as the furd rewaz if the plaintiff's prayer were granted would show different rents payable by different classes of tenants, one suit however might be instituted against such of the tenants as belonged to the same caste and followed the same occupation with a court-fee of ten rupees, because the same declaration would have to be made with respect to all the said ten tenants. And it was also held that with respect to each class of tenants a separate suit ought to be instituted. (Chatterjea and Mullick, JJ.) HARIHAR PROSAD v. ISWARDHARI SINGH.

—— Declaratory suit—Property in the custody of Court—Court-fee payable.

The property was in the custody of the Court ; all that the plff, had to do was to establish his title to the property. Therefore, it is only necessary for him to file a suit for a declaration of his title to the property, but not for recovery of possession, it is enough if the court-fee is paid as in a declaratory suit. ——— Deficiency of, on cross-objections in lower court—No appeal relating thereto—High Court can levy.

Where in the lower appellate court there was a deficiency of Court-fee on a memorandum of cross-objections which was not noticed, the High Court has an inherent power to insist on the payment of the same, even though the appeal does not relate to the subject-matter of the memorandum of cross-objections in the lower Court. ——— Determination of—Evidence.

To decide if a suit has been valued properly for purposes of Court-fees evidence should be recorded on the point. An application for the appointment of a curator under Act XIX of 1841, which contains a description of the value of the property does not impose a corresponding obligation as to the stamp duties leviable on it, and hence is not a safe creterion as to the value of the property. A decision as to valuation based on it cannot be sustained. (Fawcett, J. C. and Raymond, A. J. C.) RAMDAS v. AJUDHIADAS.

——S. 7 (iv) (c)—Valuation of suit — Court-fees—Declaratory decree—Injunction—Court fees Act, Sch. II, Art. 17—Objection to jurisdiction not raised in first Court—Suits Valuation Act, S. 8.

The Court-fees Act has no other object than to secure revenue and its provisions should be construed accordingly. A suit, the subject-matter of which exceeded Rs. 5,000 was instituted in the first class Subordinate Judge's Court, the only Court competent to hear it. The prayer was for a declaration in respect of the bulk of the properties and for an injunction regarding a house. The prayer for declaration was valued at Rs. 130 and that for injunction at Rs. 5 and Court-fee of Rs. 10 6-0 was paid. The suit was decided without any objection to jurisdiction by deft. On appeal to the High Court by plff. the deft. contended that under S. 7, (iv) (c) the subject-matter was less than Rs. 5,000 and the appeal lay to the Dist. Court only. Held that by Sch. II (17) a fixed fee of Rs. 10 has to be paid on a plaint for a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed for; the Bombay practice of stating a value of Rs. 130 upon a plaint of that description is not warranted by law and is misleading. The valuation for the purposes of Court-fees under S. 7 (iv) (c) must be in accord with the value of the subject-matter and not an arbitrary valuation. In a suit for a declaration and consequential relief, the plff. is bound to pay ad valorem fees in proportion to the loss from which he seeks to be relieved. In a suit for a declaration that a decree obtained against them is void on the ground of fraud, plffs. are bound to pay ad valorem Court-fees on the value of their share of the property sold and not merely an ad valorem fee on the amount of the decree. ——S. 7 (iv) (c) and Sch. II, Art. 17 (1)—Declaration and consequential relief—Prayer for releasing property from attachment and possession—Appeal—Court-fee.

Where plff.'s property was attached at the instance of a creditor of its ostensible owner and plff. asked only for the release of his property from attachment, the Court-fee payable would be Rs. 10 under Sch. II, Art. 17 (1) of the Court-fees Act. If the ostensible owner is also joined as a party to the suit and a prayer is made against him for recovery of possession, the Court-fee payable would be on the value of property in accordance with S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Act. If in such a suit the plff. is defeated and he prefers an appeal he must pay Court-fees on the value of the property plus Rs. 10 for declaration. If the plaintiff succeeds and an appeal is preferred by the defts. the Court-fee to be paid must be regulated by a consideration of the relief sought in appeal. If the attaching creditor appeals, the Court-fee payable would be Rs. 10 only. If the ostensible owner appeals, the Court-fee payable would be Court-fee calculated upon the value of the property. In ascertaining the value of a piece of land on which cocoanut trees have been planted, for the purpose of deciding the jurisdiction of the Court, the question whether it came under Cl. (v) (c) or Cl. (v) (e) of S. 7 of the Court-fees Act, is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence as to whether having regard to the position of the land and the number of trees thereon, the plot of land can be said to be a garden. Assessment is not the criterion in determining the question whether the land is assessed or unassessed. It will fall under Cl. (v) (e) if it can be defined as a 'garden." A few isolated trees on a piece of land will not make it a garden, but where a number of trees are planted on a particular piece of land which is well defined and can be marked off from the rest of the land, that particular plot may be treated as a garden if the land is cultivated with flower, fruit or vegetables. 12 Mad. 301. The plaintiffs having paid the amount fixed, into the Court together with an additional sum of Rs. 409-6-0 interest accruing up to the date of payment, a final decree was passed on the 29th April, 1920. The plaintiffs filed appeals from both these decrees asking for reduction of the amount fixed in the preliminary decree by Rs. 32,225-11-7. On the appeal from the preliminary decree the plaintiffs paid Court fees ad valorem on the sum by which they wished the amount fixed therein to be reduced. On the appeal from the final decree they paid a Court-fee of Rs 2 only. Held, the preliminary decree decided what the amount payable was and in the appeal from it the appellants contested the amount and paid full Court-fee on the relief claimed by them The final decree is a mere corollary to the preliminary decree and followed it as a matter of course : the plaintiffs having paid into Court, the amount fixed, there was nothing fresh for the Court to decide before it passed that decree, and the appeal from that decree is really of a formal nature, and does not contest anything beyond what is contested in the appeal from the preliminary decree. ——S. 7 (ix) and Sch. I, Art. 1—Provisions if applicable to appeals—'Suit', meaning of—Mortgage suits—Court-fee payable in appeal.

The provisions of S. 7 are applicable equally to appeals as to original suits and the word 'suit' is not there used in contra distinction to 'appeal'. Court-fees are payable not on suits or on appeals but on documents which are filed, exhibited or recorded in Courts in accordance with S. 6 of the Act. The court-fee payable in appeal need not be the same as in the suit, as the nature of the litigation may be changed in appeal. (1) If a suit for redemption or foreclosure has been dismissed the court-fee payable by the plaintiff-appellant on his memorandum of appeal will be computed in accordance with the provisions of cl. ix of section 7 of the Court-Fees Act, that is according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage. In such a case clearly the suit has not changed its nature in appeal (2) If a suit to redeem has been decreed and the defendant-appellant merely challenges the right to redeem, the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be computed in accordance with the provisions of cl. ix of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. Here again there is no change in the nature of the suit. (3) If a suit to redeem or foreclose has been decreed and the plaintiff or the defendant in appeal merely challenges the amount to be paid or received without questioning the right to redeem or foreclose, the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be on the subject-matter in dispute that is on the additional amount claimed or the amount in respect of which the appellant seeks to avoid liability. In this case the suit has clearly changed its nature in appeal, and is no longer a suit falling within the provisions of cl. (ix) of section 7 of the Act, (4) Where in a foreclosure suit a decree has been passed for a certain sum in default of payment of which within a fixed time the property shall be foreclosed and the defendant in appeal denies the plaintiff's right to foreclose on the grouud that he is not liable to pay any portion of the sum decreed, the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be calculated ad valorem on the subject-matter in dispute according to Article 1 of Schedule I, that is, on the amount of the decree the payment of which the defendant by his appeal seeks to avoid. In this case the suit has clearly changed its nature in appeal and has become a suit to avoid the payment of a specific sum. (5) Where a decree has been passed for redemption on payment of a certain sum and in appeal the defendant not only denies the plaintiff's right to redeem but in the alternative claims that if he be entitled to redeem he can do so only on payment of a larger sum than that fixed by the Court of first instance, the court-fee will be paid on the relief which is liable to pay the higher fee ; on the former the fee would be computed in accordance with the provisions of cl ix of section 7 read with Article 1 of Schedule I and on the latter the court-fees would be ad valorem on the difference between the amount found due by the lower Court and that claimed by the appellant. COURT FEES ACT (VII OF 1870), S. 12.

The word 'decree' in S. 11, para. 2, of the Act as applied to a suit for partition and mesne profits means the final and not the interim decree. Where in such a suit the court decrees the claim and awards a specific sum for mesne profits on the plaintiff paying additional Court-fee, if any, due in respect of the profits the Court has no power to fix any time for payment and the only penalty which the plaintiff will incur if he does not pay the Court-fee is that he cannot execute the decree until he pays such fee. Plff. sued in the Sub-Court for declaration and valued his claim at Rs. 1,100. The deft. objecting the Court appointed a Commissioner who fixed the value at Rs. 750. The Court returned the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. Held, that the question concerned essentially the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit and was not one relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee. Therefore S. 12 was inapplicable and the appeal to the Lower Appellate Court by the plff. was competent. S. 12 is evidently framed for fiscal purposes. The section ought to be strictly interpreted. It cannot be applied to preclude an appeal where the question raised is one of the class under which the suit falls or of the competency of the Court of first instance to entertain the suit. ——S. 12—Decision on the value of the subject-matter incidental to decision on jurisdiction—Appeal to District Judge lies.

In a suit the deft. contended that the suit was under-valued and a local Commissioner was appointed to fix the value, but the Munsif trying the suit, did not accept the valuation fixed by the Commissioner and came to the conclusion that the value was much more than that fixed by the Commissioner and consequently returned the plaint for presentation to the proper court. On appeal, the District Judge held that the Munsif ought not to have disregarded the valuation fixed and so he returned the case to him for disposal. Held, in second appeal the Munsif in arriving at a valuation, only looked at the question from the point of view of his own pecuniary jurisdiction and although, inasmuch as the values for the purposes of court-fees, and that of jurisdiction were identical he decided the value for purposes of court-fee, this decision was merely incidental to his decision on the question of the value for purposes of jurisdiction. Therefore S. 12 of the Court Fees Act did not apply and the appeal was rightly perferred and rightly decided by the District Judge. (Broadway, J.) SIKANDAR SHAHA v. GHULAM NABI SHAHA.

COURT FEES ACT (VII OF 1870), S 13.

The word "suit" in S. 10 (ii) includes appeal ; if a Court of First Instance, whose duty it is to see that the fees paid are correct, proceeds to the trial of the suit, without expressly deciding that the plaint is correctly stamped, it must be assumed that the Court has tacitly decided that the amount of fees paid, is correct. Acting on that assumption it would be competent to the first Appellate Court to call upon the party to make good the deficiency within a reasonable time to be fixed and to dismiss the claim of the plaintiff if he fails to do so. Similarly a Court of second or further appeal has the same power. 1 A. L. J. 392 Foll. 20 All. 362 ; 26 All. 270 Ref ; 115 P. R. 1884 Overruled. (*Ried, C. The reliefs claimed were, declaration as to the former, and a declaration with consequential relief, valued at Rs. 5 for the latter. It was held (1) that the value exceeded Rs. 5,000 and (ii) the suit was within the Court's special jurisdiction and (iii) consequently the appeal lay to the High Court and not to the District Judge. The plaint cleary stated the plaintiff's claim was for two distinct subjects, the first exceeding in value Rs. 5,000 and the aggregate value of both the properties constituted the value of the suit. ———S. 17—Suit on mortgage—Same person holding two mortgages—Valuation—Subject—Meaning of.

A person holding two mortgages from the same mortgagor hypothecating the same properties and even when the due date in both is the same can bring suits separately on both bonds. In other words, there is nothing to prevent a mortgagee from suing on the first mortgage without joining the second and vice versa. If that is so, there can be no question that the mortgages were separate subjects and one under S. 17 of the Court Fees Act. The ordinary meaning of the word "subject" when used in law is a thing or matter, over which a right is exercised and the two mortgages were certainly two distinct matters. They could be deemed to be one either by a covenant in the mortgage consolidating the two together, or by some provision in law. Hence the suit to enforce the two mortgages is covered by S. 17 of the Court Fees Act. (Jwala Prasad and Ross, JJ.) NAWABA WAZIRI BEGAM v. BABU SHASHI BHUSAN ROY. 2 Pat. 874 : 4 Pat. L. ———Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Partition suit—Order of Court directing defendants to put in stamped applications for separation of shares—Appeal—Court-fee.

A memorandum of appeal against an order of the court in a partition suit, directing the defendants to put in properly stamped applications if they wished to have their respective shares separated off by the Court, must be stamped with a Court-fee of Rs. 10 under Sch. II, Art. 17, Cl. (vi). (Rattigan and Shah Din, JJ.) MASHKURUNNISSA v. HASHMATULLAH. 274 P. L. R. 1913 : 20 I. C. 177 : 183 P. W. R. 1913.

———Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Decree against one deft.—Appeal for joint decree—Court-fee on appeal.

Plff. who obtained a money decree against only one of several defts. appealed with the object of getting a joint decree for the same amount against the other defts. as well. Held, he should pay an ad valorem court-fee on the amount of the decree and not a court-fee of Rs. 10 under Cl. (vi), Art 17. (Shah Din and Scott-Smith, JJ.) AMIR CHAND v. KANHAIYA RAM. 86 P. R. 1912 : 222 P. L. R. 1912 : 16 I. C. 777 : 225 P. W. R. 1912.

———Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Partition—Decree in accordance with award—Objections—Revision—Court-fee payable—Ex parte proceedings—Objections to award.

From a decree in accordance with an award by which one of the parties was directed to pay a sum of money to the other side in cash and by which actual partition of joint properties was also effected, a petition for revision was filed urging that he was not liable to pay the sum of money ; and that the Court failed to consider and dispose of his objections to the award He paid an ad valorem court-fee as regards the first relief and a court-fee of Rs. 10 as regards other relief. Held, that the petition for revision was properly stamped ; that it was not possible to estimate the second relief at a money value and consequently in respect thereof a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 was sufficient. 70 P. ——Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Suit for partition—Valuation—Dispute as to share of the plaintiff—Court-Fees Act, S. 7, Cl. 4 (c)--Suits Valuation Act, S. 8.

A suit for partition, pure and simple, where the plaintiff is in joint possession of his share and there is no dispute as to his title or share falls within Sch. II, Art.17, Cl. vi of the Court-Fees Act. A suit in which plaintiff prays for declaration of his title and partition as a consequential relief falls within S. 7, Cl. iv (c) of the Court-Fees Act. In the former case the suit must be valued for purposes of jurisdiction at the value of the entire subject-matter and not at the value of the plaintiff's share only. In the latter case the plaintiff's share becomes also the valuation of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction. (Das and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.) RANJIT SAHI v. MAULAVI QASIM. 2 Pat. 432 : 4 Pat. L. CROWN.

There is no room for assuming that the sovereign in India possessed only the melwaram or the right to the revenue and not to the soil itself. Accordingly there is no presumption that the grantee of an Inam from the Crown gets only the melwaram. The grantee however takes the lands subject to the rights of others existing at the time of the grant. (Sir John Edge.) SURYANARAYANA v PATANNA. 41 M. 1012 : 25 M. L T. 30 : 23 C. W. ———Islands—Beds of tidal and navigable rivers—Territorial waters— Right to islands formed.

The ownership of the beds to tidal and navigable rivers and of the bed of the sea within three miles of the mainland vests in the Crown and carries with it the right to islands arising within those limits. ———Debts of—Priority—Extent and limits of.

It is only when the claims of the Crown and the claims of 'common persons' concur or come into operation, that the Crown is preferred. But the Crown has no more right than a "common person" to seize one man's property and apply it in or towards the discharge of a debt due from another. ——Escheat—Right of Zemindar—House on the abadi—Death of resident without legal heirs.

On a question arising as to whether the Crown was entitled by escheat to certain abadi house and sites on the death of D. and M. the residential tenants thereon, Held, upon the facts and the evidence in the case that D and M were limited owners of the house and that the effect of the settlement of 1850 A. ——Who is—Officers of State.

The Crown is not bound by any Act unless expressly or by necessary implication referred to therein and for this purpose the Crown not only means King but also Officers of State in discharge of their executive duties. The Bom. Rent Act, therefore, does not affect the powers of the Government and their officers under the Land Acqn. Act. (Setalwad, J.) BOMBAY MUNICIPALITY v. M. ——Debts— Priority— English mortgage—Puisne mortgagee—The Crown is not entitled to priority over a mortgagee under an English mortgage.

In such a mortgage the ownership is wholly transferred to the creditors which is however liable to be divested by repayment of the loan on the appointed day. He has no debt provable in insolvency until his security has been proved or realised. The ownership of the property passes to the first mortgagee in an English mortgage, and not to the puisne mortgagee, and he is not entitled to priority over the Crown. Shares merely deposited and not actually transferred do not create a right in favour of the depositee superior to the right of the Crown. According to English Law whenever the right of the Crown and the right of the subject with respect to payment of debt of equal degree come into competition, the Crown right prevails. This rule is of universal application except in so far as the legislature has thought fit to interfere with it. Abandonment o .

———Abandonment of—Grazing right over jungle land—Suspension of grazing for two months in a year, if an interruption.

Where a customary right of grazing over jungle land was, by arrangement, suspended for a period of two months in the year, such suspension is not an interruption of the right but only a limitation of the period of its duration. (Piggott, J.) MOTI CHAND v. JAGGU AHIR. 11 I. C. 88.

———Abandonment of—Non-user.

If a custom has been in existence for a long series of years, it could not be extinguished by non-user. Non-user is only a ground for doubting its existence. (Ashworth, A. J. C.) HAMID FATIMA v. BHOLA. 52 I. C. 869: 6 O. L. J. 349.

Adoption.

———Adoption—Lands for maintenance—Reversion by custom—Adoption by a widow of the last holder does not affect custom.

Reversion by custom of the subject-matter of a grant for maintenance is not affected by the adoption by the widow of the last maintenance holder. (Scott, C. J. and Batchelor, J.) AGAR SINGJI v. BAI NANIBI. 28 I. C. 529 : 17 Bom. L. R. 273.

———Adoption—Gift to adopted son--Who can challenge.

Where a person makes a gift in favour of another alleging him to be his adopted son, a declaration made at the time of mutation and also at the time of suit by collaterals to impeach the alienation is sufficient proof of adoption. If the gift is declared invalid in such suit, the donor alone can appeal against the decree. (Chevis, J.) TOTA v. MUKHA. 60 I. C. 448 : 3 Lah. L. J. 89.

———Adoption—Daughter's sons—Hindu Jats of Mauza Liddar, Tahsil and District Jullundur.

Held, that, it was not proved by that custom among Hindu Jats of Mauza Liddar, Tahsil and District Jullundur, the gift of ancestral property to daughter's sons is valid. (Leslie Jones and Abdul Raoof, JJ.) KHUSHAL SINGH v. KANDA. 5 Lah. L. J. 63 : 56 I. C. 931 : 2 U. P. L. R. (L.) 110.

———Adoption—Widow—Authority of husband—Wajib-ul-arz.

If an entry in a Wajib-ul-arz empowers a Hindu widow to adopt a son but is silent on the point of the authority of her husband, the proper construction of the entry is that the widow was given the ordinary power to adopt with the authority of her husband. CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Burden of Proof.

Applicability.

———Applicability—Necessity — Question of fact or law.

The question of valid necessity may be one of law, or of customary law or one of fact according to the peculiar circumstances of the case. (Johnstone, C. J. and Rattigan, J.) RAJA v. ALLAH DITTA. 112 P.W.R. 1915: 110 P. R. 1915: 29 I. C. 802 : 37 P.L. R. 1916.

———Applicability of—Change of residence—Effect.

Though persons carry their own customs with them wherever they go, it does not necessarily follow that they retain those customs unchanged after long residence amongst other tribes holding different customs. (Johnstone and Chevis, JJ.) KHAIRE KHAN v. GHULAM CHAUSE. 32 P. R. 1911: 238 P. L. R. 1911: 10 I. C. 387: 46 P.W.R. 1911.

———Applicability of—Hindu Law—Law of joint family applicable equally with the law of inheritance.

Cutchi Memons in Madras Presidency are governed by Hindu Law in matters of succession. A member of a Cutchi Memon family cannot bequeath by will his share in the property. (Kumaraswami Sastri, J.) SIDDICK HAJEE ABOOBUCKER SAIB v. EBRAHIM HAJEE ABOOBUCKER SAIB. 31 M. L. T. 183 (H. C.).

Custom must be sufficiently defined for its application to the facts of the case to be clear and undoubted. (Ashworth and Simpson, A. J. Cs.) THAKUR RUDRA PRATAB NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS v. THAKUR NIRMAN PRASAD SINGH AND OTHERS. 9 O. L. J. 552 : 1923 Oudh 61.

Burden of Proof.

———Burden of proof—Jains—Adoption of orphan.

The onus of proving the antiquity and the invariability of a custom contrary to the normal law is on the party averring its existence. The adoption of an orphan boy is valid by custom among Jains. (Macleod, C. J. and Fawcett, J.) PARSHOTTAM GANPAT v. VENICHAND GANPAT. 45 Bom. 754 : 61 I. C. 492 : 23 Bom. L. R. 227.

106 P. L. R. 1911 : 11 I. C. 378 : 237 P. W R. 1911.

———Burden of proof—Custom at variance with law—Onus.

The person who sets up a custom must establish it to the whole length of abrogating the law under which the opposite party claims title and if this is not done the general law must prevail. Possible inferences or probable implications cannot uphold a custom. (Simpson and Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.) BALBHADDAR PRASAD v. NARAYAN DAS. 9 O. L. J. 518 : 1923 Oudh 102.

Essentials of validity.

A reasonable custom proved to be immemorial and continuous may be presumed to have a legal origin. Custom founded on wrong and usurpation and not on people's consent is invalid. A custom excluding females from inheritance which originated from usual dissensions and quarrels among her husband's family and father's family is invalid as unreasonable, A custom must be proved by clear and unambiguous evidence. A custom excluding unmarried daughters and sisters and leaving them to depend on distant relations for support is unreasonable. A custom must be certain as to the persons or class of persons who are to be affected by it. A custom applicable only to 'Respectable Baluchis and Sirdhars' is too vague, and improper. (Pratt, J.C. and Crouch, A. J. C.) BIBI SONA v. MIR ABDUL HUSAIN KHA. 16 I. C. 641: 6 S. L. R. 1.
[On Appeal see 45 Cal. 450: 45 I. A. 10: 43 I. C. 306 (P.C.)].

———Essentials of validity — Custom and prescription—Limitation.

A custom must be immemorial, reasonable, continuous and certain in its nature and in its locality. Custom differs from prescription in that prescription is the making of a right while the custom is the making of a law. (Mookerjee and Panton, JJ.) GOPALKRISHNA v. ABDUL.
66 I. C. 640 : 34 C. L. J. 319.

———Essentials of—Ancient, uniform, etc.

A custom to be valid should be ancient, uniform, reasonable, certain, consistent and not immoral. As regards its being ancient it must have existed "so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary". (Chaudhuri and Cuming, JJ.) NITYA GOPAL BANERJEE v. PROVAS CHANDRA MUKHARJI. 24 C. W. N. 309: 56 I. C. 19 : 31 C. L. J. 37.

law must be construed strictly. (Sanderson, C. J., Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ.) MARIAM BIBEE v. SHEIKH MAHAMMAD IBRAHIM. 48 I. C. 561 : 28 C. L. J. 306.

———Essentials of —Reasonableness of—Test of—Landlord and tenant—Rent—Suspension of—Inundation.

A custom suspending the entire rent due from a holding on inundation, irrespective of its extent or injurious character is unreasonable. A custom prejudicial to a class and beneficial only to an individual is repugnant to the law of reason. The reason in this context is not every unlearned man's reason but artificial and legal reason warranted by authority of law. (Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ.) SIVANARAYAN MUKHOPADHYA v. BHUTNATH GUCHAIT. 45 Cal. 475: 22 C. W. N. 422: 45 I C. 289 : 28 C. L. J. 148.

———Essentials of—Reasonableness—Test of.

It is wrong to hold that a custom permitting the tenant to appropriate the timber on his land is unreasonable. When there is nothing unfair or dishonest or contrary to public good in a custom, the custom is not unreasonable. (Chapman and Walmsley, JJ.) GURAI KAR v. KUARMONI SINGHA. 29 I. C. 312 : 19 C. W. N. 1188.

———Essentials of — Immemorial — Reasonable, etc.

A custom to be valid must be immemorial, reasonable, must have continued without interruption since its immemorial origin and must be certain in respect of its nature, generally as well as in respect of the locality, where it is alleged to obtain. The fact of its inconsistency with the common law of the realm is no ground for holding the custom unreasonable and bad. (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) MAHAMAYA DEBI v. HARIDAS HALDAR. 42 Cal. 455 : 20 C. L. J. 183 : 27 I. C. 400 : 19 C. W. N. 208.

———Essentials of—Ancient, invariable, etc.—Onus.

It is of the essence of a special usage as to succession that it should be ancient and invariable and proved to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence by the party alleging it. 14 M. I. A. 570, Ref. ———Essentials—Deductions not permissible.

Custom is not always logical and the Courts should guard against the danger of seeking to extend custom by logical processes, e. g., by analogy. (Broadway and Campbell, JJ.) NAJMUDDIN v. ABDUL HAMID. 1923 Lah. 175.

———Essentials of valid custom—Proof of instances where custom has applied.

"Custom" implies, not that in a given contingency a certain course would probably be followed, but that that contingency has arisen in the past and that a certain course has been followed, and it is not at all within the province of Courts to extend custom by the process of deduction from the principles which seem to underlie customs which have been definitely established. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Le Rossignol, J.) DALIPA v. DALLU. 4 Lah. L. J. 336.

———Essentials of validity—Family custom.

A custom to be legally binding, must be ancient, certain and invariable and a family custom at variance with a general custom, requires stronger evidence than a general custom. (Chevis and Le Rossignol, JJ.) CHARANGIT SINGH v. AMIR ALI. 64 I. C. 892 : 2 Lah. 243.

———Essentials of—Unlawful usage.

A usage not accepted as lawful or invariable by a party, cannot be recognised as a reasonable custom having the force of law. (Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) MEECHEL PILLAI v. J. M. BARTHE. 39 Mad. 1056 : 19 M. L. T. 249 : 30 M. L. J. 423 : 3 L. W. 348 : 34 I. C. 557 : (1916) 1 M. W. N. 307.

———Essentials of—Compulsory force.

One test to find out the existence of a valid custom is to see whether the right claimed was ever contested and whether the persons who but for such custom would under the general law be entitled to certain property, abandoned the contest and suffered themselves to be excluded, thus consciously accepting the custom as having the force of law. 16 A. 221 ; 8 M. 464, Foll. ; 2 M. ———Essentials of—Reasonableness—Right of Zemindar to eject occupants of houses in town area.

A custom entitling the Zemindar of a town to eject the occupants of houses built in the town area at any time on payment of the cost of the materials of their houses is unreasonable and unenforceable in a Court of law. (Lindsay, J. C.) RABIUNNISSA v. MUHAMMAD ALI. 43 I. C. 189 : 20 C. C. 299.

———Essentials of.

A custom to be valid, must be ancient, continuous, reasonable and definite of which unambiguous and clear proof must be given. A custom cannot be held valid in law, if it is established to be of a few years standing, and followed by a few individuals in a few instances only for it is not sufficient to establish its continuity. (Rafique, A. J. C.) SUBHADRA v. TRIBHUAN DAT. 15 I. C. 247.

———Essentials of—Ancient, reasonable, etc.

A valid custom must be immemorial reasonable, certain and continued without interruption since its immemorial origin. 1 M. 235 (P.C.) ref. to. (Sharfuddin and Roe, JJ.) PUNCHA v. BINDESWARI. 37 I. C. 960.

CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Essentials of validity.

———Essentials of— Ancient, certain, etc.——Strict proof.

A custom should be construed strictly and must be shown to be 'ancient', 'certain' 'invariable' and 'continuous' by means of 'clear and unambiguous evidence.' (Hayward, A. J. C.) MUKHI GUZI v. MASTAN SHAH.

36 I. C 951 : 10 S. L. R. 126.

Evidence of.

———Evidence of—Wajib-ul-arz—Ambiguous statement—Evidentiary value.

A custom is not established by an ambiguous statement of it in a Wajib-ul-arz. But when it is not shown by reliable evidence that the Settlement officer neglected to perform his duty or was misled in recording a custom, and it does not appear that the statement of the custom is ambiguous, the record in a Wazib-ul arz of a custom is most valuable evidence of the custom, much more reliable evidence than subsequent oral evidence given after a dispute as to the custom has arisen. ———Evidence of— Custom in derogation of Hindu or Mahomedan law.

If is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends. ———Evidence of— Judicial recognition, sufficient to dispense with proof in individual case.

When a custom or usage, whether in regard to a tenure or a contract or a family right is repeatedly brought to the notice of the Courts of a country, the Courts may hold that custom or usage to be introduced into the law without the necessity of proof in each and individual case. It becomes in the end truly a matter of process and pleading. (Lord Dunedin.) GANGADHAR RAMRAO v. RAJA OF PITTAPUR.

———Evidence of—Wazib-ul-arz, entry in—If a record of custom.

Where there is an entry of a single proprietor of a Mahal in a Wazib-ul-arz, there can be no custom of pre-emption. Even if the custom existed. it came to an end, when the Mahal vested in a single proprietor. (Tudball and Sulaiman, JJ.) KARIMULLAH v. ATMA RAM.

———Evidence of — Wajib-ul-arz — Evidentiary value of.

14 I. C. 572.

———Evidence—Nature of.

4 Lah. 202 : 1923 Lah. 448.

———Evidence of.

Proof of custom is not confined to judicial precedents alone and the fact that no contest has taken place in the past may well raise a presumption that the custom was so well recognised that no one thought of contesting it. Custom is not a matter of inference but of proof, and it is the evidence adduced in support of the custom set up that can, and must, alone be looked to ascertain whether or not it has been proved to exist. 29 C. 433 (P. ———Evidence of.

Custom must be proved by evidence and courts cannot deduce the existence of one custom from that of another. It is not the function of a court to say what a custom ought to be, but its duty is confined to enforcing such customs as known to exist. (Chevis and Campbell, JJ.) DHANNAN v. BHAGWAN.

———Evidence of—Succession—Instances not supported by documents.

To establish a custom of exclusion of females at variance with Hindu law it must be shown by clear and cogent evidence that there was actually an assertion of her claim by the female and a denial by the male. Mere inaction which may be due to various causes, e.g., mutual good will or ignorance of the law, affords no indication of the fact that the rule of Hindu law has been abrogated and a custom at variance with it has taken its place. CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Evidence of.

———Evidence of—Entry in Riwaj-i-am setting up special custom.

———Evidence of—Opinions—Instances.

Where a claim is based on custom the plaintiff must lead clear evidence of instances in which the custom has been followed ; opinions however numerous, that the custom ought to have been followed are not sufficient to entitle the Court to hold that the custom had been established. CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Evidence of.

———Evidence of—Riwaj-i-am —Opposed to general custom.

A special custom recited in a riwaj-i-am, opposed to general custom and unsupported by instances, is insufficient to prove its existence. In cases where an entry in a riwaj-i-am has been attested by people for whom it has been prepared, the Courts have to see what the real custom is and not what the people think to be the custom. ———Evidence of—Instances — Quantum of proof.

Ordinarily the Court requiries proof of at least more than one instance in which an alleged customary right has been exercised, but there is no hard and fast rule. ———Evidence of—Custom set up to be precisely proved—Proof of different custom.

Evidence to prove a custom must not only be consistent with the custom which is alleged but must also prove a custom which is not wider than that alleged. If the evidence tends to prove a custom wider than that which is alleged, the party seeking to establish the custom is not at liberty to adopt part only of the evidence and to reject the rest. But this does not necessarily establish the converse, namely, that if a broad custom is pleaded the existence of a lesser custom could not if proved be found. The defendants alleged a custom which they failed to prove ; but from evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff to rebut the evidence given on behalf of the defendants, the Courts considered that it was apparent that a custom had been proved, of the same type as that which the defendants had alleged but of a narrower compass. Held that in modern times a court could have little hesitation in finding that although the entire custom alleged by the defendant did not exist but a material part of it did. (Bucknill and Ross, JJ.) NATHUNI RAI v. MAHARAJADHIRAJ SIR RAMESHWAR SINGH BAHADUR. 1 Pat. L. R 289 : 1924 P. 147.

Family Custom.

———Family custom—Requisites of—No presumption in favour of custom—Bom. Reg. (IV of 1872) S. 26—Effect of.

When either party to a suit sets up a 'custom' as a rule of decision, it lies upon him to prove the custom which he seeks to apply. Custom binding inheritance in a particular family, although foreign to the spirit of English Law is recognised in India; and if the custom is well-established in one particular family or district the fact that it might apply to other familes or districts will not make it void. Special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession must be (1) ancient, (2) invariable, and (3) established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. Where a large number of conditions have to be fulfilled to test a custom and a number of instances are adduced in proof of that custom, it is necessary that one or more examples of each condition should be established, but it is not necessary that all the conditions should be proved in each instance. The latter requirement would greatly weaken the evidence by tradition to which in certain cases great weight is due. The best evidence as to custom of inheritance is generally found in connection with the division of land and the revenue records may therefore be of great value. No presumption in favour of custom against the general or personal law is created by S. 26 of Bombay Regulation (IV of 1872) or S. 5 of the Punjab Laws Act ; it is only when the custom is proved that it is made the rule of decision. 41 P. ———Local custom—Proof of—Right of way—Antiquity—Open user.

A Court should not find a local custom unless it is satisfied of its reasonableness and its certainty as to extent and application and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted or by stealth or force and that it had been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by agreement or otherwise, the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things with which it is concerned. The evidence must be sufficient to show that the right has been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by agreement or otherwise the usage had become customary law of the locality. The doctrine of lost grant is applicable to private rights claimed by prescription. It is inapplicable to a right claimed on the basis of immemorial custom. The question of legal origin is only of importance where it is suggested that the right claimed might have originated within the time of memory, whatever that time may be. In the case of a custom its legality depends on such considerations as its reasonableness and its certainty. As to the length of user or enjoyment which must be proved before a local custom may justifiably be inferred no definite rule can be laid down. But if the existence of the custom depends on oral evidence, and the user of enjoyment is taken back as far as living memory can be expected to go, then in the absence of rebutting evidence it is not unreasonable to say, presumintur retro or to infer an immemorial enjoyment of theright, or say, in Bengal, an enjoyment from the time of the Permanent Settlement. ———Local custom— Proof— Transferability of occupancy holdings.

To prove a custom or usage that occupancy holdings are transferable in any locality, it is not sufficient to show simply that such holdings are sold in the village or neighbouring villages, as the essence of usage of transferability is that transfers made to the knowledge of, but without the consent of, the landlord are valid and must be recognised by him. ———Local custom—Riwaj-i-am, Weight of.

A local custom binds all the families of the class indicated who reside in the locality where the custom prevails. It is not necessary to prove that the custom applies to the particular family under consideration. (Lindsay, A. J. C.) JAGDEO v. BHAWANI. 61 I. C. 920 : 8 O. L. J. 116.

———Local custom—Proof—Tribal or family custom.

If a local custom pertaining not only to the sub-caste of the parties but also to the persons belonging to the other sub-castes is alleged to exist it is sufficient to prove the custom so far as the particular sub-caste under consideration is concerned. Where a local or tribal custom is pleaded and it is proved that it exists in the tribe of the locality there is a very strong presumption that any particular family of the tribe in that locality is bound by that custom though no evidence may have been adduced to prove that the custom pertains to that particular family. In such a case the onus of proving that the custom does not obtain in that particular family lies on the person who says so. (Kanhaiya Lal, J. and Lyle, A. J. C.) MAKUND SINGH v. KALKA SINGH.

———Malikana—Proof.

There is no custom in monza Gharwa whereby maliks in the village can realize malikana at 25 per. cent. on every sale of house in the village. Though plff. claimed 25 per. cent. and defts. admitted 2 per. cent. the plff. must prove the custom. On failure of such proof suit will be dismissed. Marriage.

———Marriage—Divorce—Capricious divorce —Custom invalid.

A custom by which the marriage tie can be dissolved either by husband or wife against the wish of the other capriciously and on no condition except the payment of a sum of money fixed by the caste is opposed to public policy. A suit for restitution of conjugal rights by a Lalung, a member of a semi-aboriginal tribe, against his wife is not maintainable. A tribal custom requiring a son in-law to reside in the family of his father-in-law is not opposed to public policy. Nor is it in conflict with any express law of the country. It may be otherwise in the case of Hindus or Musalmans governed by the Hindu or Muhammadan Law. 28 Cal. 751 ; 17 Cal. 670 ; 2 Bom 140 ; 6 Mad. 374, Ref. Mercantile Usage.

———Mercantile usage—Unreasonable—Not to be recognised.

A trade custom to be recognised by a Court of law must be universal as well as reasonable. A custom allowing an agent to turn himself into a principal and thereby profit himself at the expense of the principal, is unreasonable, and cannot be implied in a contract of agency. (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) KISHORI LAL v. JIWAN LAL. 4 U. P. L. R. (A.) 59 : 1923 A. 242.

———Mercantile custom — Bombay silver market.

The custom of the Bombay Silver market for forward contracts is that only shroffs are the outside buyers and sellers, though shroffs may have and often do have outside principals for whom they are acting The shroffs when acting for principals work sometimes for kachchi adat and sometimes for pakyi adat. In the case of the former the adatia shroff guarantees the performance of the contract to the other shroff, but does not guarantee its performance to his principal. In the case of the latter, adatia shroff who then acts for a higher rate of commission is liable as a principal both to his own employer and to the other shroff. In the silver market of Bombay the custom does not obtain whereby the selling shroffs are exempted from personal liability to the principal of the buying for adatia damages for breach of a contract entered into by them. ——— Mercantile Usage—Proof—Oral evidence.

Usage is proved by the oral evidence of persons who must become cognizant of its existence by reason of their occupation in the particular trade or business and the evidence establishing custom or usage must be clear, convincing and consistent, and to prove an usage in a particular trade it must be shown that the usage is consistent and reasonable and was universally acquiesced in and that everybody acknowledged it in the trade and

CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Pleading and Proof.

Pleading and Proof.

———Pleading and proof—Ancient and invariable onus.

Where a plff. governed by the Hindu Law asserts that a rule of Hindu Law does not apply to the parties owing to a custom at variance with Hindu Law, he must state the custom and all its incidents and establish by unmistakable evidence not only its existence, but also that it is ancient and invariable. ———Pleading and proof—Nature of custom—Pleadings.

Though as a general rule, party who relies upon a custom must allege it with distinctness and certainty, it is not possible nor desirable in India in all cases to pin down the parties to the precise form of their pleadings. The mere fact that a deft. did not object to witness for the plff. giving evidence in support of a custom set up does not estop him from objecting to similar evidence being given by another witness on a subsequent date on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the case in the fact of the wording of the issue on the point. As a matter of scientific pleading, an issue in a case regarding a custom set up therein and the allegations in the plaint on which the issue is based ought to contain particulars of the custom on which the plff. seeks to rely at the trial. ———Pleading and proof—Variation—Evidence of—Judicial decisions.

Although a custom must be sufficiently defined for its application to the facts of the particular case in which that custom is pleaded, so that it may be clear and undoubted, yet the party pleading the custom can be allowed to prove the same in a sense narrower than that stated in the pleadings. Decisions by courts on questions of custom afford valuable evidence as to the existence of the custom. 45 C. 450 ; 49 I. A. 119 Ref. A usage of recent date cannot be regarded as a custom. A custom must be proved by clear and unambiguous evidence to be ancient and invariable, In this respect there is no difference between a family custom and local custom, 14 M I. Succession.

———Succession — Exclusion of daughters—Proof of custom.

Where instances are adduced in support of an alleged custom of exclusion of daughters from the inheritance in a Muhammadan family the position and relationship of the different members of the family must always be considered in determining whether claims were not met because the rights to which they relate did not exist or they are put on one side because in the circumstances, there was no need for their assertion. 8 Mad. 464, Appr. ———Succession—Thakorate of Gamph—Grants for maintenance—Reversion.

A village was granted by a Thakor of Gamph to one of his junior sons for maintenance.

CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Succession.

As a result of a long litigation between the successor of the grantor and the grantee's sons, a settlement was arrived at and a large part of the village was given to the sons of the grantee and their descendants who were to enjoy the same as maliks, mukhtiars, and dhanies. The sons of the grantee died without issue and the village was claimed back by the right of reversion. The whole estate was at that time under the management of Talukdari Settlement Officer. On an objection by an adopted son of the widow of the last descendant of the grantee, to the claim by reversion Held. that the succession to the Thakorate was by primogeniture and according to the custom prevalent villages for maintenance were granted to junior members but upon failure of male issues those villages were to revert to the Thakore. The estate was impartible and ordinary rules applicable to a co-parcenary property had no application in the present case. The alienation under the compromise deed which did not confer an absolute estate was invalid according to S. 12, Talukdari Act, and that neither the adoption nor the existence of the female could affect the reversion. ———Succession—Law applicable to a particular class of people—Proof of.

CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Succession.

When the question is what is the law of succession governing a particular class of people, the way in which the property has been held, or the past conduct of the parties, or the fact that the parties themselves or their ancestors have in previous litigation set up that they are governed by this or that system, all these are strong evidence to show what law the parties have followed. ———Succession—Exclusion — Female heirs—Daughters—Sisters and Sister's sons.

CUSTOM (GENERAL)—Succession.

A custom, if proved, supersedes the general law and all customs must be proved by clear and unambiguous evidence. ———Succession—Eunuch—Presumption.

Ordinarily succession to a eunuch is governed by the personal law to which he is subject, and the mere fact that the heirs did not trouble themselves to claim the property but permitted it to go to another eunuch is not sufficient to defeat it. (Stuart, A. J. C.) DADHIJ SINGH v. BASTI.
46 I. C. 77: 5 O. L. J. 189.

Usage.

———Usage—Difference.

Usage should never be used as synonym for custom, it has two distinct legitimate meanings but neither of them should be confused with custom. It is used to denote what is done by people uniformly and consistently. Used in this sense usage has not the force of law. It would only obtain the force of law when it is proved to be reasonable, invariable, ancient, etc., in which case it becomes what is known as custom It is also used to denote what is done uniformly and has been so done in a certain locality or by a certain trade or profession, etc., for a period sufficient to make it probable that people in their contract and in their contractual relationships adopt it as an implied term or condition. Where this is the case a court which has to put a construction upon a contract, the trade or local usage, (here again usage has not the force of law nor will it be sanctioned by the courts if it is contrary to positive law, where a well-established recent usage is proved and the proof is carried back for a period which may be regarded as covering the period of living memory), a presumption is thereby raised that this usage is in reality the exercise of an ancient and valid custom. If there is no rebutting evidence a decision in favour of the custom may be based on this evidence alone. If the presumption raised by recent usage is rebutted by proof that an ancient custom could not have come into existence then the usage fails to possess any legal effect. A family custom is not likely to be as the Hindu or Mahomedan Law it supersedes. There is no sound authority for holding that custom in India need not be proved to be ancient. Special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession should be established by clear and unambiguous evidence to be ancient and invariable. (*Ashworth and Simpson, A. J. CUSTOM (PUNJAB.)

Validity.

The existence of the right of privacy does not depend on the caste or creed of the person owning it or on the fact that it was used by the ladies. Adoption—Evidence of.

———Adoption—Evidence of.

In a case where the power of customary adoption by a sonless proprietor is not disputed all that is necessary to constitute an adoption is the cleat expression of an intention on the part of the adoptive father to adopt the boy concerned as his son, and a sufficient manifestation of that intention is the execution and registration of a deed of adoption coupled with a clear declaration in court and subsequent treatment as adopted son. The proof of such subsequent treatment cannot, however, be reasonably demanded in a case where very soon after the execution of the deed

There should be a clear expression of an intention on the part of the adoptive father to adopt the boy concerned as his son. Such intention is sufficiently manifested by the execution and registration of a deed of adoption coupled with a clear declaration in Court and subsequent treatment of the adoptee as adopted son. If the collaterals of an adoptive father sue for a declaration in respect of an adoption without allowing him a reasonable opportunity of proving continuous subsequent treatment of the boy as his adopted son for a sufficiently long period, the Court will not grant them a declaration simply and solely because such subsequent treatment has not taken place. ——Alienation — Gift—Will— Pathans of Charsadda—Peshawar—Sonless proprietor—Bequest to daughters.

The distinction under Customary Law between the power of gift inter vivos and the power of testation is a matter of degree and form only, and where the power of gift is shown to exist, an initial presumption arises that there is a co-extensive power of testation. Where the practice of gift-making has established itself, the effect must be to incline public opinion favourably towards the practice of testamentary bequests which are really in the nature of deferred gifts which are more easily revocable. They are undoubtedly special customs upon special points existing among the various Pathan tribes of the Charsadda and Peshawar Tahsils, but there is a strong presumption that their customs are substantially similar, unless some special reasons for divergence can be established. The power of a sonless proprietor to make a bequest in favour of his daughters, was held to be established among the Pathans. No restriction exists upon the testamentary power of a Mahammadzai proprietor except that which prohibits, in certain circumstances, the disinheritance of sons. (Pipon, J. C.) ABDUL MANAN v. MT. Alienation—Law Governing.

——Alienation—Law governing—Gift—Daughter—Sheik Ansaris.

A limited right of a daughter in property gifted to her by her father, cannot be inferred from the fact that a widow has, by custom, only limited rights in her husband's property. Nor has evidence that a Muhammadan father is prevented by some local custom from giving the whole of his property to one of his sons, any bearing on his power to give the whole of his property to his daughter. The Sheikh Ansari Pathans of Basti Danishmandem, District Jullundur, are not governed by agricultural custom. A gift by a sonless man to his daughter conveys an absolute estate presumably. ——Alienation--Law governing—Residential houses, transfer of.

The custom as to transfer of tenancy without the consent of landlord was held to be not proved in this case with the following observation. There is a tendency in this province to set up in villages, customs which are subversive of the rights of property, as for example, in the present case a custom which, in fact, takes from the zamindar the right to the site of a tenant's holding on the determination of the tenancy. The claim of a tenant to transfer a right of residence really amounts to this, for it means that the tenant, may, by assignment, transfer to a stranger a right of residence without the consent of the zamindar to force upon the latter a tenant who may be distasteful to him. It prevents the landlord from resuming the occupation of his land when a tenant selected and approved of by him, chooses to give it up. It is the change of a right of a tenancy into a right of permanent occupancy. (Abdul Raoof and Moti Sagar, JJ.) SEWA SINGH v. GHULAM. 1923 Lah. 467.

——Alienation—Law governing—Aroras of Taunsa town—Powers of alienation.

Where the deceased belonged to a mercantile community and was a resident of a town he would be presumed to be governed by his personal law in the matter of alienation and the persons who claim to the contrary must establish the existence of custom overriding the personal Law. The Riwaj-i-am contains merely an expression of opinion. It cannot be raised to the dignity of a custom unless followed in practice for a sufficiently long period and recognised as binding by the members of the particular community. A provision in the Riwaj-i-am that a gift cannot be made in favour of a daughter in the presence of near collaterals is too sweeping to govern all Hindus residing in towns. Aroras of Taunsa are not governed in the matter of alienation by agricultural custom. (Shadi Lal and Wilberforce, JJ.) ASA NAND v. MT. ROSHNI BAI. 68 I. C. 92 : 2 Lah. L. J. 178.

The custom of alienability of land by an elder brother as guardian of his minor brother among Mahomedans set out in the Riwaj-i-am of the Muzaffargarh District, though unsupported by instances, was in accord with that prevailing generally in the Punjab under which a guardian in the case of Hindus and the Sikhs can alienate his ward's property for a necessary purpose. As it could not be said in the present case that the Riwaj-i-am was imperfectly compiled, the entries are strong evidence of the existence of the alleged custom and shift the onus on to the plffs. although the custom is contrary to the personal law of Mahomedans and the entries are unsupported by instances. 44 Cal. 749 (P.C.) ———Alienation—Law governing—Succession —Daughter as collaterals of 4th degree—Sodhis of Mauza Bhamipura, Tahsil Jagraon, Ludhiana District—Law applicable—Presumption.

The initial presumption in the case of Khatris, and especially of sodhis, is that they follow Hindu

Law. They are not essentially agriculturists and they have, as a rule and as a tribe, a priestly status. This presumption can be rebutted by proof of a special custom, or of special incidents and circumstances calculated according to the authorities to shift the burden of proof. Sodhis of Mauza Bhampura, Tahsil Jagraon, District Ludhiana, do not follow agricultural system in connection with alienations of, or succession to, ancestral immoveable property but follow Hindu Law and collaterals of the fourth degree do not exclude daughters. In cases in which it is presumed that persons, not essentially agriculturists by race, follow agricultural custom the question always is whether they form a compact village community, or at least a compact and considerable body of land owners in a more or less homogeneous village. If they do, and if they have been agriculturists for generations, the presumption aforesaid is made. But while the absence of the adoption of agriculture as a means of livelihood for several generations disproves that custom is followed it must not be supposed that in all cases the existence of this incident is sufficient in itself to prove that custom is necessarily followed. It is not the duty of the alienee to see to the application of the money or to find out if the whole of the money due to the antecedent creditor was actually paid if a decree was in existence the payment of that decree constitutes a valid necessity. The fact that the decree-holder subsequently accepted only a portion of the amount due and gave up the rest of his claim is of no consequence and does not in any way affect the validity of the debtor of the alienation. When the amount of consideration for a sale of this kind which is found to be without necessity represents only a small portion of the entire consideration, it is not necessary to convert the sale into a mortgage. CUSTOM (PUNJAB)—Alienation—Necessity.

——Alienation — Necessity — Payment of antecedent debts.

There is no authority for the proposition that a male holder of land both ancestral and acquired, must charge his just antecedent debts on the non-ancestral land. Custom permits the alienation of ancestral land for the purpose of paying just antecedent debts and a provision that this cannot be done, if there is self-acquired land to alienate for that purpose would give the reversionary heirs a control over self-acquired property to which they are not entitled. CUSTOM (PUNJAB)—Alienation—Necessity.

———Alienation—Necessity.

An agriculturist governed by the Customary Law has no power to alienate his ancestral land for the purpose of trading capital where the borrower was a man of bad character and had squandered a large amount and had ample property for all his means the onus lies on the alienee to prove strictly the legal necessity even though the borrower wanted money for payment of revenue and for purchase of capital and for other needs of the alienor (Scott-Smith and Abdul Raoof, JJ.) KABUL SINGH v. KALA SINGH, 67 I.C. 737: 3 Lah. ———Alienation—Necessity—Antecedent debt.

An alienee from a male proprietor, has only to prove the existence of debt and not the necessity for it, provided the debt is a just one. (Martineau, J.) MUHAMMAD BAKHSH v. BALANDA. 62 I.C. 811.

———Alienation—Necessity—Just debt.

Where the alienor is a male, the only question to be decided is whether the purpose of alienation was a necessary one. A just debt need not be incurred for necessity. If the alienee is the antecedent creditor he need not prove necessity for all the previous debts. The distinction between the case where the alienee is the antecedent creditor and where the alienee is a third person arises only where the previous debts are extravagant or unreasonable. (Martineau, J) KANSHI RAM v. MAULA BAKSH 60 I. C. 714.

———Alienation—Necessity—Re-marriage.

The re-marriage of a proprietor who has a son alive is not a necessity justifying the sale of ancestral land. Where a sale is held partly for necessity it should be allowed to stand subject to the provision that when succession opens, the heirs can recover the land on paying the sum found to be due on account of necessity ; but the sale should not be converted into mortgage. (Chevis and Martineau, JJ.) MAHAMDDIN v. THAKOR SINGH. 60 I. C. 461.

———Alienation— Necessity—Fictitious items entered in sale deed—Effect of.

Fictitious items are generally entered in sale-deeds but not necessarily for fraudulent purposes. They are generally resorted to for frightening pre-emptors or for enhancing the value of the bargain. Where the vendor alienated by sale one canal ten marlas out of thirteen canals of land that he owned to discharge his debt and he was not proved to have been addicted to a riotous living or living in extravagance, held, the sale was prima facie advantageous to him and might be supposed to be an act of good management. In a case at least where only a small portion of the entire cultivation is not proved to be for necessity the sale should not be converted into a mortgage. 27 P. R. 1909 Dist. ———Alienation—Necessity—Onus.

A usufructuary mortgagee leased the lands to the mortgagor enhanced the rates and obtained subsequent mortgages from the mortgagor for arrears of rent. Held, the onus was on the mortgagee to prove that the rent charged was fair and that there was necessity for enhancing the rates of rent after every three years. The mortgagor having been proved to be extravagant and it not being shown that he managed his property well and carefully the subsequent three mortgages were not for necessity and were not binding on the sons of the mortgagor. (Abdul Raoof, J.) HAKO v. NIGA HIA. 55 I. C. 307.

———Alienation — Necessity — Anticipating needs.

A male proprietor is no more entitled to anticipate his needs than a widow, in order to establish a necessity to justify alienation. (Smith and Martineau, JJ.) KHAZAN SINGH v. SUHEL SINGH. 54 I.C. 923 : 156 P. R. 1919.

———Alienation—Necessity—Antecedent debts—Knowledge of alienee.

An alienee discharging an antecedent debt is not required to make an enquiry into the nature thereof. But he gets no advantage if he has knowledge of the true nature of the debt or acts in bad faith. An alienee who is identified with the antecedent creditor so that he and the creditor cannot be viewed as two separate persons is in the same position. Per Le Rossignol, J.—It is the duty of an alienee of ancestral land to make enquiry not merely as to the existence of antecedent debts but also as to their nature if the result of the first enquiry would raise doubts in the mind of an ordinary man and to the morality or reasonableness of debts. (Shadi Lal and Le Rossignol, JJ.) JHANDU v. NIAMAT KHAN. 54 I. C. 842 : 1 Lah. 472.

———Alienation— Necessity — Consideration—Full payment not proved—Sale if liable to be set aside.

A Court should not set aside a sale merely because the payment of an item of consideration recited in the deed of sale has not been made or because its payment is doubtful. This is especially where the consideration found to be actually paid represents a reasonable sale price. (Scott-Smith and Le Rossignol, JJ.) PIYARE LAL v. CHAKAR. 1 Lah. L. J. 215 : 6 P. L. ———Alienation—Necessity—Sale of father's land for payment of debts—Suit by sons to set aside sale.

A man who has sold a portion of his land to pay off his father's debts cannot undo the sale merely on the plea that the sale was not for necessity and, as regards the share of the alienor who was a major at the time, the sale must stand. The minor brother was not bound to recognise his father's debts as being a charge on the ancestral land and his mother was not authorized to alienate his share in the land in discharge of these debts and his share could, therefore, be recovered without any payment. The fact that the minor had died during the pendency of the appeal and was now represented by his elder brother, could not affect the decision in regard to the minor's share. 12 W. R. 427 Dist. ———Alienation— Necessity— Proof of—Sale when not binding on alienor's successors.

If a man is a notorious spendthrift and profligate a creditor lending him money will not be saved merely by saying that the money advanced was required to pay off antecedent debts. Knowing the character of the alienor, the alienee must make due enquiries about the necessity for the loan. Merely because the alienor stated that the money was required to pay Government revenue or to buy bullocks or to give presents at a marriage or for miscellaneous expenses the alienee will not be protected. A creditor lending money to a man possessed of ample income should make full enquiries as to the necessity for the loan. If he, however, had squandered his income in extravagance and wanton waste, the lendor would not be justified in advancing money for Government revenue. In his case, on suit of the grandson, the alienations of the grandfather were all declared invalid. (Scott Smith and Broadway, JJ.) RAM KISHEN v. HASSI. 57 P. W. R. 1917: 39 I. C. 191: 76 P. R. 1917.

29 I. C. 801: 118 P. L. R. 1915.

———Alienation—Necessity —Selling aside—Form of decree.

In case a considerable time elapses after the alienation the vendee cannot reasonably be in a position to give an accurate account and proof of the legal necessity of the transaction. A small sum of the consideration which could not be shown to come under necessity cannot vitiate the sale when an action has been brought to set aside the alienation after a considerable time. In the absence of any clear proof of reckless extravagance or immoral waste on the part of the alienor, strict proof of debts for which alienation is made is not necessary. ——Alienation — Necessity— Discharge of mortgage.

Where a person in debt sells away part of his lands to redeem mortgages and to get back a part of the land, the sale is a prudent one and cannot be challenged by a reversioner. ———Alienation—Necessity—Partial — Effect —Fair price.

If a transaction is mainly for necessity it is valid one hundred times the jama is fair price for a sale. It is a valid necessity to raise money for satisfying a decree for pre-emption of land. If the principal mortgage money is shown to have been borrowed for legal necessity the interest added in advance and also the compound interest charged under the mortgage bond constitutes a valid charge. Heavy interest cannot always be regarded as unnecessary if the principal sum is proved to be for necessary purposes. It is enough if the alienee satisfies himself that the alienor wants the money for a necessary purpose. CUSTOM (PUNJAB)—Alienation—Necessity.

An alienation by a landowner of a portion of his ancestral land for paying up a decree against one of his sons, is binding on the other sons; the heirs of the alienor can resist a suit for possession by the alienee on the ground of absence of consideration. Where a limited owner can raise the amount required by a mortgage, a sale of the whole property is a piece of bad management and the sale ought to be converted into a mortgage even if the whole amount were for necessity. Strict proof of necessity cannot be insisted on in the case of an old debt. Where it has not been proved that the alienor has wasted his property or spent money in an extravagant way the full consideration stated though it is composed partlyof old debts may be accepted as being for necessity. ———Alienation—Right to contest.

Persons who are heirs to an estate are entitled to challenge alienations effected by females who are holding on life tenure under custom. Para. 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law runs counter to the principle of Hindu Law and custom does not exclude a daughter's son from inheritance on the ground of his mother having predeceased her father or grandmother. Under the Hindu Law a female takes only a life interest in the property inherited by her from a male and the nature of her interest does not depend upon the existence or otherwise of persons having a right to succeed to the property after her death.

An estate of a widow under the customary law is subject to the same restriction as that of a widow under Hindu Law. Where the persons contesting the alienations are males whose right to inherit the estate is beyond dispute there is no custom which prevents them from impugning such alienations, they are entitled to contest. C. A. No. 128 of 1917 Ref. Where there is no custom applicable to a case the plaintiffs can fall back on their personal law. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Martineau, J.) GOBINDA v. NANDU. 3 Lah. L. ———Alienation—Right to contest—Religious endowment- Dohli tenure.

The dohli tenure is a peculiar kind of tenure to be found in the south-eastern districts of the Punjab. It is a rent-free grant of a small plot of land by the village community for the benefit of a temple mosque or shrine or to a person for religious purposes. In the Revenue records the proprietary body are recorded as the owners of the property and the grantee is recorded as a tenant in the column of cultivation. So long as the purpose for which the grant is made is carried out, it cannot be resumed, but should the holder fail to carry out the duties of his office, the proprietors can eject him and put in some one else under a like tenure. Such a tenure cannot be sold or mortgaged and there can be little doubt such an alienation made by the dohlidar is absolutely void and can be challenged by his successor. (*Shadi Lal, C. The general custom in the Punjab is that an occupancy tenant does not lose his right by reason of the land of his holding being submerged. Therefore, he has the same rights after alluviation as he had before diluviation of the holding. If a custom to the contrary is alleged it must be very strictly proved by the landlord. An entry to the contrary in a wajib-ul-arz of a village is inoperative because the agreement on which it was based was void for want of consideration. Applicability.

———Applicability—Agricultural community—Law governing—Hindu Law—Burden of proof.

In the case of a community like the Rai Brahmans whose occupation is agriculture the presumption is that they are governed by custom the onus lies upon the party asserting that they are governed by Hindu Law to prove the same. (Martineau and Moti Sagar, JJ.) BASHU RAM v. PIARA RAM. 4 Lah. 434 : 1924 Lah. 365.

———Applicability—Sodhies--Debts of ancestor—Liability for.

Sodhies are governed by customary law in matters of alienation and in respect of the liability of sons for debts contracted by their father, (Broadway and Harrison, JJ.) LABH SINGH v. THE FIRM RUR CHAND TULSI RAM. 4 Lah. L. J. 64: 1922 Lah. 122.

———Applicability of—Khatris of mauza Salima Taksilmoga—Ferozepore Dt.

The initial presumption in the case of Khatris is that they followed the Hindu Law and the onus of displacing it is on those alleging they are governed by custom. A custom without instances is inconceivable. (Abdul Raoof and Campbell, JJ.) SUNDAR SINGH v. SUNDAR SINGH. 1922 Lah. 431.

———Applicability—Maintenance — Illegitimate children of—Mahomedan concubine by Hindu father.

The plaintiffs, the two Mahomedan concubines and their illegitimate sons by a deceased Hindu gentleman, brought a suit against the legitimate son of the latter for arrears of maintenance. Held, that plaintiffs had failed to prove any claim to maintenance by family custom. The plaintiffs could not appeal to Hindu Law, nor could the case be decided upon general considerations of equity merely because Hindu Law is silent as to the claims of illegitimate Mahomedan progeny of a Hindu. (Chevis and Le Rossignol, JJ.) CHARANJIT SINGH v. AMIR ALI KHAN. 64 I. C. 892: 2 Lah. 243.

CUSTOM (PUNJAB)—Applicability.

———Applicability of—Khatris —Presumption.

The initial presumption in the case of a khatris is that they follow Hindu Law. (Broadway, J.) LACHMAN DAS v. GANGA RAM. 64 I. C. 264.

———Applicability—Personal law when applied.

If in a case, a custom is not established, personal law should be applied, although the parties rely upon custom. (Le Rossignol and Wilberforce, JJ.) FATIMA BIBI v. SHAH NAWAZ. 2 Lah. 98: 60 I C. 509: 3 Lah. L. J. 152.

———Applicability of—High Caste Hindus—Ambala.

High caste Hindus in Ambala are not ordinarily presumed to be governed by agricultural custom. (Scott-Smith and Leslie Jones, JJ.) TANI v. RIKHI RAM. 1 Lah. 554: 2 Lah. L. J. 481: 56 I. C. 742: 114 P. L. R. 1920.

———Applicability—Pathans in cities—Non-agriculturist residents of cities

Where there are Pathans and non-agriculturists in Punjab Mahomedan Law prevails in matters of inheritance. The Pathan residents of Ludhiana city are therefore governed by Mahomedan Law and a special family custom regarding inheritance must be strictly proved. Disregard of the rights of females in the family to a large extent is not sufficient to prove general or special custom. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Wilberforce, J.) NATHU v. MURAD BIBI. 2 Lah. L, J. 450.

———Applicability of—High Caste Hindus—Kapur Khatris of Jhelum District.

High caste Hindus not depending upon agriculture for their livelihood are presumed to be governed by Hindu Law and the onus rests heavily on the party denying this to establish the existence of a custom at variance with that law. Kapur Khatris of Jhelum District are governed by Hindu Law in matters of partition. (Shadi Lal and Broadway JJ.) MUSSAMMAT GANESH DEVI v. DASHAN SINGH. 2 U. P. L. R (Lah.) 100: 56 I. C. 478 : 2 Lah L. J. 377.

———Applicability—Jat agriculturists.

The presumption is that the parties being Jat agriculturists and residents of the village are governed by custom and not Hindu Law. (Chevis, A.J.C. and Wilberforce, J.) MAHA RAM v. BASU. 2 Lah. L. J. 370.

———Applicability—Test—Agricultural custom.

The tests for determining whether a community has adopted agricultural custom are (a) whether it forms a compact agricultural community by itself, (b) whether their source of livelihood is wholely or almost solely agricultural, and (c) whether the members of the community have given up their old customs under the personal law and adopted the customs of their agricultural neighbours in matters of succession and alienation. (Abdul Raoof and Martineau, JJ.) HARBANS LAL v. ATRA. 53 I.C. 858.

———Applicability— Khatris of Amritsar—Joint family—Ancestral property— Son's right to partition during his father's lifetime—Onus.

CUSTOM (PUNJAB)—Applicability.

Under the Mitakshara Law a son can enforce a partition even during his father's lifetime, 5 C. 148; 21 Cal. 111, Ref. The initial presumption no doubt is that non-agricultural high caste Hindus follow their personal law. As the strict rules of Hindu Law are not in force in the principal caste the onus of proving that among Khatris of Amritsar the son has such a right is on the son. ———Applicability of—Brahmins of Man, Tahsil Phillour—Jullundur District.

In general Brahmins and especially those at Man are governed by Hindu Law in matters of alienation and not by custom. (Shah Din, J.) TULSIRAM v. NATHU. 39 I. C. 93 : 5 P. R. 1917.

———Applicability—High Caste Hindus.

High caste Hindus not maintaining themselves on agriculture will be first presumed to be governed by Hindu law and not by custom. (Shah Din, J.) SHIB DIAL v. MATHRA DAS.

———Applicability—Aroras of Sialkot.

The Aroras of Sialkot are probably governed by Hindu Law. (Rattigan and Shah Din, JJ.) RUKMAN DEBI v. SHIB DEBI. 10 P. R. 1916: 69 P. L. R. 1917 : 32 I. C. 526 : 204 P. W. R. 1915.

———Applicability—Aroras of Mouza Vidor—Succession.

Aroras of Mouza Vidor are generally governed by Hindu Law, but they have adopted the rule observed by their agricultural neighbours which gives the father the ordinary estate for life enjoyed by an agricultural proprietor in the province but they have not otherwise adopted other rules. The claim for grandsons to succeed to a share in the property of their grandfather along with the father is untenable among them. (Rattigan and Leslie Jones, JJ.) BUDHA RAM v. MUHAMMAD DIN. 86 P. R. 1915 : 196 P. L. R. 1915 : 32 I. C. 315 : 165 P. W. R. 1915.

———Applicability — High-class Hindus — Presumption—Onus.

The high class Hindus of the Punjab are governed by their personal law and the party setting up a custom must prove that he is governed by it. (Shah Din and Scott-Smith, JJ.) ISHAR DEVI v. BIND RABAN. 5 P. R. 1915 : 26 I. C. 686 : 137 P. L. R. 1915.

———Applicability of— Dhillon Jats— Evidence of custom.

Unless it is proved that the Dhillon Jats follow the same custom throughout the Punjab no reliance can be placed on the evidence of witnesses from other districts. (Shah Din and Chevis, JJ.) GOBIND RAM v. SURAJ KUAR. 131 P. L. R. 1914 : 24 I. C. 470 : 114 P. W. R 1914.

———Applicability— Adoption of custom by tribe once following personal law—Onus.

The onus of proving that a tribe once following a personal law has adopted custom is on the party asserting it. Proof that the tribe has adopted this or that rule or custom followed by another tribe is not enough to hold that it must follow all other rules of that tribe, except where the other rules are so inseparably connected with the rules adopted, that the adoption of one would necessarily imply the adoption of the others. (Johnstone and Rattigan, JJ.) SULTAN BIBI v. GHULAM HAIDER KHAN. 32 P. R. 1915 : 24 I. C. 358 : 206 P. L. R. 1914.

A party setting up a custom can, on failure to establish the same, fall back on the general law. (Shadi Lal, J.) NIHALA v. BHUTI.
29 P. L. R. 1914 : 23 I. C. 416 : 10 P. W.R. 1914.

———Applicability—Khatri traders, Jullundur District—Presumption.

The mere fact of owning land for 6 or 7 generations by Khatri traders in Jullundur District does not raise any presumption that they are governed by agricultural custom, the true test being whether agriculture is followed by them as a chief means of livelihood, in which case only custom applies. The initial presumption in their case is that they follow Hindu Law. 4 I. C. 947, Dist. (Agnew and Shadi Lal, JJ.) HAKIKAT RAI v. RAM SARAN DAS. 16 P. R. 1914 : 23 I. C. 154 : 130 P. L. R. 1914.

———Applicability—Sahgal Shaikhs of Jullundur City—Presumption if general custom is followed.

There is no presumption that the Sahgal Shaikhs of Jullundur City, who are not an agricultural tribe, follow the general agricultural custom in matters of alienation merely because they do not follow Muhammadan Law. (Johnstone and Chevis, JJ.) RAHIM BAKSH v. BUDHAN.
74 P. R. 1914 : 92 P. L. R. 1914 : 22 I. C. 712 : 141 P. W. R. 1914.

———Applicability—Khatris of Rahon and Nurmahal—Presumption.

Khatris of Nurmahal and Rahon of Jullundur District settled in agricultural villages are governed by Hindu Law. The mere fact of having invested money in land does not raise a presumption that they have altered their personal law. (Reid, C. J. and Beadon, J.) RUKMAN v. KIRPA DEVI. 338 P. L. R. 1913 : 22 I. ———Applicability—Brahmins—Presumption.

In the case of Brahmins, the initial presumption is that they are governed by their personal law and not by custom ; the question whether they have given up the personal law and adopted custom depends upon the fact whether they are dependant mainly upon agriculture. Sials of Muzaffargarh have, by custom, unlimited powers of alienation by gift in respect of ancestral property. Females are not competent to object to an alienation by a male proprietor. Where a Tribal Custom says that the consent of heirs is required it can only refer to those heirs, who according to custom are entitled to grant or withhold consent. The doctrine of Mushaa has no application to gifts in the Muzaffagarh District. Where the donor supports a gift and the person disputing it claims adversely to both the donor and the donee, the gift is not invalid for the mere ———Succession—Agnates——Persons of the same caste and Got—Inference.

The mere fact that plaintiff is of the same caste and Got as the alienor does not necessarily lead to the inference, that he is descended from the same common ancestor and is his heir. (Moti Sagar, J.) KIRPA v. MT. CHINTI. 1923 Lah. 530.

———Succession—Ancestral property—Liability of successor for debts of last male holder—Onus of proof.

The general law is that ancestral landed property left by a deceased male proprietor governed by custom is not liable in the hands of the next holder for a debt, unless the debt has been expressly charged on the land. But it is always open to a litigant to plead a special custom and prove that the person in possession of the ancestral property, which it is sought to attach, is the legal representative of the deceased debtor and that the property is deemed to be the property of the said debtor. The onus of proving special custom is on the party alleging it, at any rate in the case of the parties who have not complete control over their ancestral holding. (*Ratligan, C. J. ———Succession — Chandawand and Pagwand—Whole blood and half blood.

In cases of collateral succession arising under the customary law of the Punjab, where the dispute is as regards the property of a common ancestor of the deceased and of the claimants, if the Chunduwand rule of distribution prevails the whole blood excludes the half blood ; if the Pagwand rule prevails both succeed together. ———Succession—Chandawand and Pagwand —Per capita or per stirpes—Jats of Mauza Gurdaspur.

The normal custom in the Punjab undoubtedly prescribes a division according to the Pagwand rule, and the onus lies heavily upon the person who relies upon the Chandawand rule i.e., division per stirpes. Not only is there a general presumption in favour of the division of property per capita but there are judgments relating to the Jats of Gurdaspur Tahsil in which the rule Chandawand was held not to be proved and the rule of Pagwand was followed in the matter of inheritance. Held also defendant failed to prove a family custom or to discharge the onus. ———Succession— Chandawand or Pagwand Mekans of Kot Bhai Khan, Shahpur District —Groups—Presumption — Collateral succession —Whole blood and half blood.

Among Mekans of Kot Bhai Khan in the Tahsil and District of Shahpur, the rule of distribution is the Pagwand one and there being no provision in the Wajib-ul-arz for any specific rule in the case of collateral succession the presumption would be that they would succeed together on a footing of equality When subsequent to a distribution according to the Pagwand rule the whole blood brothers, form into separate groups becoming joint in food and cultivation among themselves and entirely separate from their half brothers, the whole blood excludes the half blood in subsequent collateral successions. A special custom of sardaru obtains in the family of Awans of Mouzas Chakrawala and Thamevali, Mianwali District, and among them the rule of succession from father to son is governed by the Pagwand rule and in the case of collateral succession, the whole blood and half blood succeed together. Ordinarily the presumption is in favour of Pagwand rule of succession, but the Chandawand rule was held to apply because the plaintiff contended that the latter rule applied to lands in Chawinda village, while admittedly it was the rule in Dagranwali, the deceased possessing lands in both villages and mutation being effected without contest. ——Succession — Cognates — Childless proprietor—Construction of Riwaj-i-am.

The general principle of the Customary Law of the Punjab is that in the absence of agnates of a childless proprietor, any cognate, however distant is entitled to succeed to his property in preference to the proprietary body of the village. The specific mention of sister and sister's issue in the Riwaji-am merely illustrates the principle that cognates have a right to succeed before the general body of proprietors. ——Succession—Daughters—Collaterals.

According to the general custom in Punjab daughters are usually preferred to collaterals so distantly related as the 6th degree even in regard to ancestral property ; while in the case of self-acquired property daughters usually exclude even nearer collaterals. It is quite opposed to all the principles of customary law that collaterals so distantly related as the 9th degree should exclude daughters in the case of property which is non-ancestral and therefore the mere entry in the riwaj-i am unsupported by instances that daughters can in no circumstances inherit their father's ——Succession—Daughter—Collaterals--Self-acquired property.

Daughters are generally preferred to collaterals in regard to the acquired property of their father, and no distinction is made between property acquired by the father and property acquired by his ascendants. By acquired property is meant property not necessarily acquired by the father himself; but property acquired by him or any of his ancestors short of the common ancestor. The agnatic theory reposes on the principle that collaterals descended from the common ancestor derive title from that common ancestor: but when the common ancestor had no interest in the property in dispute his descendants derive from him no more right than he had, i, e., they acquire no right. Collaterals derive no right to the property from the common ancestor and in accordance with custom are not to be preferred to a daughter of the last male owner. Plaintiff was entitled to the whole property of her father, inasmuch as her sister, though arrayed as a defendant did not defend the suit. (*Chevis, C. Succession—Females.

———Succession— Females — Exclusion of — Tribal custom—Jats—Exception.

Assuming that there is a general custom of agnatic or collateral succession in default of male issue to the exclusion of female heirs among the agricultural tribes of the Punjab, the rule is subject to exceptions. The Riwaj i-m of Jhang District recorded that among the Jats, the daughter of a sonless man, if she is married to a near relative, inherits her father's property in preference to collaterals. Held, that the Riwaj-i-am, in the absence of rebuttal, was sufficient evidence of the particular custom recorded and that the Dhabs, a small endogenous Mohamedan tribe of Jats, were governed by the special custom. CUSTOM (PUNJAB)—Succession—Khanadamad.

Gifted land reverts to the donor or his collaterals only when the line of descendants of the donee both male and female has been completely exhausted. The same rule applies in the case of gift to a Khanadamad. 68 P. W. R. 1913 overruled. (Chevis and Dundas, JJ.) SHAH MAHOMED v. FAZIL ILAHI. 2 Lah. L. J. 475 : 56 I. C. 913 : 2 U. P. L. R. ———Succession—Khanadamad—Insidents.

The custom of Khanadamad is designed to benefit the daughter and her issue. On the daughter's death without issue, the khanadamad succeeds to the property of her father for life and on his death the property reverts to the daughter's blood relations, his sons by another wife having no locus standi to claim it. The Muhammadan Jats of Nawanshahr Tahsil in the Jullundur District do not follow the Khanadamad whereby a son-in-law succeeds to his father-in-law's property. A mere son-in-law is not necessarily a Khanadamad and if he claims to be so, he must establish a custom conferring those rights on a son-in-law. Where a person has been murdered with the sole object of securing his property, the murderer along with his son is excluded from inheriting the property of the deceased, in spite of the fact that the property is ancestral property, as their succession, would be opposed to public policy. The murderer's right in such a case is swept away and with it is carried away the right of every one who claims through and not merely from him. Village Community.

——Village Community — Applicability of agricultural custom.

One of the most important tests to be applied in determining whether a particular caste is or is not governed by agricultural custom is to ascertain whether or not they form a compact village community or, at least a compact section of the village community. If they do so, the presumption is strongly in favour of the applicability of custom. This presumption in favour of custom has been applied even in cases of Brahmins, and must be still stronger when applied to a tribe whose religious and social status is much inferior. Where the caste concerned forms a compact section of the village community there is a strong presumption in favour of custom. ——Village community--Brahmins of a village —Whether, governed by custom or Hindu Law—Test to determine.

In order to find out whether Brahmins of a village are governed by custom or Hindu Law, ordinarily one most important test is whether the Brahmins in question are a compact village community or at least a compact section of the village community. ———Widow—Unchastity—Forfeiture—Effect.

When an unchaste widow gifts her husband's property to her love, the reversioner is entitled to immediate possession thereof in cases where by custom, unchastity involves forfeiture of the widow's estate. Per Robertson, J.—There is a distinction between the nature of forfeiture of a widow's estate by re-marriage and by unchastity. Per Johnstone and Chevis, JJ.—The forfeiture operates as against the widow and the alienee from her (not being a bona fide alienee for value) from the date of the unchastity and not merely from the date of the suit by the reversioner. Among Hindus and Muhammadan Rajaputs of Hoshiarpur District an unchaste widow forfeits her life-estate in the property of her husband. She becomes a trespasser, directly the act of adultery is committed and the reversioner's suit must be regarded as a claim to dispossess a person who has prior to the suit ceased to hold any right and becomes trespasser. ———Muhammadan law — Waqf — Court's power to direct cypres—application of funds.

The doctrine of cypres is applicable to India and is in harmony with the spirit of the Muhammadan Law. The doctrine is applied when from lapse of time or change of circumstances, it is no longer possible beneficially to apply the property left by the founder or the donor in the exact way in which he has directed it to be applied beneficially for similar purposes by different means. Eleemosznary doles are demoralising and mischievous in their effect and only pauperise the recipient and ought to be discouraged. The Court held that maintenance and support of poor Muhammadan students giving preference to those among the disciples or descendants of the original Sajjudanashin, would carry out the intention of the founder at the present day and under the present circumstances. ———Doctrine of—Scope of—Hindu Law.

Where the objects mentioned by the dedicator do not exhaust the corpus of the fund, the Court is to find out whether there was a general charitable intention or purpose. Even though the object may be specified and the bequest otherwise denni e, if the law will not allow the application of the fund for the purpose, the Courts are not at liberty to infer a general intention in favour of charity and to direct the application of the property to other charitable purposes. If the Court can ascertain that there was a general charitable intention, the fact that the particular object for which the charity was intended did not exist or that the fund intended for that charity could not exhaust the whole income, will not be any reason for holding that the bequest failed in whole or in part. If the donor intended that the fund should be devoted to charity and that the particular intention was named merely as a channel to effect that intention the whole fund will be regarded as dedicated to the charity and the Court will proceed to carry out the intention of the testator on the principle of cypres doctrine. When grants made to religious institutions are not earmarked, or are not intended to exhaust the recurring income, and whenever they are made as general thanks-offerings, it is proper to direct their application to the promotion of knowledge. The doctrine of cypres is in harmony with Hindu Law. Indian Courts can give directions towards application of the trust income, though the trustee may not himself be competent to apply it. Under S. 92, C. P Code, the Court can sanction a scheme on a cypres application of a charitable trust. (Abdur Rahim and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) MUTHU KRISHNA v. RAMACHANDRA. 47 I. C. 611 : 37 M. Breach of Contract.

———Breach of contract—Doctrine of frustration of contract.

To interpret a business bargain, expressed in the language of commerce, it is no doubt important to appreciate the methods and the point of view of business men, but this is merely a prudent way of qualifying the mind to construe their words, and so to determine their meaning, and is a very different thing from postulating that reasonable men would have been likely to agree to one kind of liability and not to another, and from this, concluding that, whatever the words of the contract say, that kind of liability, and that alone, is the obligation of the contract. As a matter of fact there is nothing surprising in a merchant binding himself to procure certain goods at all events. It is a matter of price and of market expectations. No doubt it is a speculation, but many dealings even in cotton goods are of that character. Where the vendor performed a subsequent contract with Govt. during war after breaking the contract with the plaintiff to supply goods as and when they may be received from mills, Held, the adventure, of which the commercial purpose is suggested to have been frustrated, is of course, the purchase and sale of these goods between the parties to this contract, and this adventure was not frustrated. All that happened was, that the defendants failed to perform their contract. When they have paid the damages, one commercial purpose, at any rate, will, so far from being frustrated, have been fulfilled. The Mills, from which the goods were to come, no doubt were contemplated as continuing to exist, though it does not follow that in a bargain and sale, the closing or even the destruction of the Mills would affect a contract between third parties, which is in terms absolute ; but where the Mills did continue to exist and did continue to manufacture the goods in question, only they were made for and delivered to somebody else, the matter is completely outside the principle enunciated in (1903) K. B. 740 or (1903) K. B. 756. (Lord Sumner.) HARNANDRAI FULCHAND v. PRAG RAJ. 44 M. L. J. 498 : 47 Bom. 344 : 25 Bom. L. R. 537 : 27 C. W. N. 879 : (1923) M. W. N. 547 : 18 L. W. 441 : 38 C. L. In a case where there are mutual obligations on the parties, it is on the plaintiff to show that on the date fixed for performance of the contract, he was ready and willing to perform his part of the bargain. ———Cause of action—Institution of legal proceedings—Injury—Compensation—Costs.

The mere failure of a litigant to establish his claim to relief in a civil suit does not necessarily, in fact does not usually—give the successful party a cause of action for damages simply by reason of his success. Even if an action has been brought falsely and maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, it does not follow that the bringing of the action will furnish a cause of action in a subsequent suit to the person who has been sued. The first step is to prove special damage, and in the absence of the proof of special damage, no action for damages will ordinarily lie. The reasons are that the bringing of an ordinary action does not, as a natural or necessary conclusion, involve any injury to a man's property, and. further that the only costs which the law recognise, and for which it will compensate him are the costs properly incurred in the action itself. For this the successful defendant has already been compensated. But the case is different when the bringing of an action does as a necessary consequence involve an injury to property which cannot be compensated by the grant of costs in the action. The only fact proved in support of the allegation was that plaintiff had, two years before the application for attachment, purchased certain properties in the name of hie wife and had subsequently paid for improvements on it. On the passing of the order of attachment, the court amin at the instance of the defendant proceeded to the plaintiff's shop and took the goods out of the shelves whereupon the plaintiff paid the suit amount. ——— Master and servant—Wrongful dismissal.

In an action for wrongful dismissal, the general rule is that the plaintiff may recover damages for the whole unexpired period of service; where, however, it is provided that the agreement may be terminated at an earlier date by giving a previous notice, the parties may reasonably be held to have contemplated the time limit of the notice as attaching to any liability for wrongful termination of the agreement. In such cases damages for wrongful dismissal should be limited to the period of notice required under the agreement. Where the law creates a duty and a party is disabled from performing it without any default of his own by the act of God, the law will excuse him, but where a party by his own contract creates a duty he is bound to make it good notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity. ——— Measure of—Contract—Tort—Trespass—Bona fides.

Damages for trespass are at large, but at least the plaintiff is entitled in every case to nominal damages. If the defendant makes a bona fide mistake a court ought to be content to award nominal damages, but if a defendant takes a risk which he knows to be a risk and persists in fighting, when he knows or ought to know that he is wrong, his conduct ought to be measured in some way by the special damages which the Court is entitled to award. The measure of damages in contract is quite different to that in tort. In contract the plaintiff can only recover the actual pecuniary loss. In tort he is entitled to special damages for trespass to property. Circumstances may aggravate the plaintiff's grievance, and can be dealt with by some special sum which is awarded partly as a solatium, and partly in terrorem to other persons who may be disposed to act as the defendants have done. The defendant purchased a plot, deposited one rupee instead of ten per cent, and refused to pay the balance. The plaintiff resold the property. Held, that the only remedy the plaintiff had, was under the contract, and in the absence of a condition as to payment of damages, the only penalty incurred by the defendant was the forfeiture of the ten per cent. deposit which he was bound to pay. (Banerjee and Rafique, JJ.) MUNICIPAL BOARD OF ALLAHABAD v. TIKANDARJANG.

The Hubli Municipality, a body corporate under the Bombay District Municipal Act, with a view to provide a municipal cotton market selected for that purpose the site of a large ancient tank largely silted up. The southern boundary of that tank was an embankment. In reclaiming the bed of the tank, the Municipality utlized a part of the embankment and took precautions to prevent the flow of water In June 1907 there was a sudden and extraordinary rainfall at Hubli, which practically overflooded the whole Municipal area and caused damage to the goods in the plff.'s Ginning Factory, to the south of the tank. Thereupon, the plff. sued the Municipality to recover damages alleging negligence on the part of the defts in carrying out the reclamation work. The deft. denied the plff.'s allegation and answered that the damage to the plff's. goods was due to the abnormal heavy rain in June 1907 and that no precautions by the defts. could have averted the damage caused. Held, that the suit was not maintainable and that the onus of proof of negligence lay on the plffs. and if the neglect in the execution of their ———Negligence—Injury to workman on acoount of negligence of employer—Measure of damages.

The defendants (employers) for the purposes of their own business used a method of breaking up caste iron which consisted of dropping a heavy weight on pieces of iron on a bed of iron with the intention that these pieces should be broken into smaller pieces. The weight was dropped from a height of 35 feet with the inevitable result that pieces of iron flew about. It was found that the iron pieces habitually flew to distances of four or five yards from the pit. The fencing around the pit was only three feet high and in spite of it iron pieces were flying about. The plaintiff's husband, who was employed under the defendants, was working at a distance of 70 to 80 yards from the pit, was hurt by a piece of iron and killed. In an action by the plaintiff for damages held, that the defendants owed a duty not only to the public but to their servants to take adequate precaution that the pieces of iron shall not cause injury, and that they were obviously negligent in putting up an inadequate screen round the pit. The defendants were therefore liable in damages, and they could not succeed on the plea of volenti non fit injuria as they failed to prove that the person injured knew of the danger, appreciated it, and voluntarily took the risk. As regards damages the High Court increased the award of the lower Court by giving three years' wages instead of one year's wages awarded by the lower Court. (*Sir Walter Schwabe, C. DARKHAST.

A certain warg consisting of a portion of submerged lands was granted on Dharkhast. The whole extent was continued in the patta without any portion being struck off: Held, that the Dharkhast granted included the whole warg number and not merely the cultivable portion. Where a grant is made by an officer competent to make it, it can be set aside by a superior officer only for fraud, mistake of fact or want of jurisdiction. Land submerged under water continues the property of the former owner, unless it is struck out from his patta and the assessment reduced. The Court of Appeal set aside the order of dismissal and remanded the case on condition that plff. appellant should pay to deft. respt the sum of Rs. 200 as costs both of the lower court and of the Court of appeal. Held, that the proper construction of the order was that the case should be remanded and heard upon the issues on which the decision was not given only on condition that plff. paid deft. the sum of Rs. 200 and that the trial Court should refuse to proceed with the case until the condition imposed by the Appellate Court had been complied with. Held, on a proper construction of a decree regarding nankar that the decree was merely declaratory and that the suit was not barred by S. 47, C. P. Code. The operative part ended with the word "be decreed". What followed appeared to be directions to the office. The decree fixed no date for the payment of the nankar. The mere addition of the direction that the nankar was to be realised on the execution side would not alter its character as a declaratory decree ; 6 O. C. 239 : 8 O. should be the property of the sons. The allowance was not paid to the widow for some years and she applied for execution of the decree. Held, that the decree was merely declaratory and could not be executed. In the case of a declaratory decree the work of the Court is to pronounce the decree and no order is issued which the Court contemplates enforcing by execution. In an executory decree there is a definite order to a definite person to do or refrain from doing something. In the case of decrees on awards the test is whether the award merely declares or creates a right or contains a definite order which the Court can execute. (*Hayward and Crouch, A. J. The plaintiff obtained a decree in 1895 that the interest should be recovered at a certain rate before 31st of May every year from 1892 and that the principal should be received in twenty-five years, that if the judgment-debtors obstructed the plaintiff in attaching the cash allowance till his principal was paid or obstructed the plaintiff in getting his interest every year or obstructed him in any other way or if the plaintiff did not get the interest every year, the plaintiff should recover the whole amount by sale of the mortgaged cash allowance. The judgment-debtor made default in payment of annual instalments of interest. Execution of the decree was taken out in 1902 and Rs. 171 and odd recovered in 1903, and Rs. 165 and odd in 1908. Another Darkhast filed in 1909 was infructuous, a third darkhast was filed in 1904 but it was dismissed. In none of these darkhasts was the point taken that the plaintiff was barred from executing the decree because of failure of taking advantage of the default clause. The present darkhast was filed in 1916 praying for execution for the whole amount. Held, that as the previous conduct of the parties showed that the plaintiff should not be barred absolutely from executing the decree merely because he had sought to execute the decree for the instalments in arrears; he may after 1914, when continued default in the payment of interest was made, take advantage of the decree and execute for that instatment which was in arrears and for the principal amount. The judgment-debtor made default in the payment of the instalment of a certain month and paid it along with the instalment of the following month on the 11th of that month. Held, that the decree-holder could execute the decree for the whole of the remaining amount, as there was default in paying two instalments. It should be understood that plaintiff is not entitled to take possession of the lands in dispute in any other month except the month of Chaitra." The plaintiff applied in 1919 to execute the decree and claimed in the alternative that the application be treated as a suit. Held that the effect of the decree of 1886 was not to put an end to the mortgage, that the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continued to exist between the parties and only the amount due was ascertained. Even if the application of 1919 be considered to be one for the execution and as such barred under S. 48, C. P. Code, still it could be converted into a suit for redemption under S. 47, C.P. Code. The mortgagee brought a suit to enforce his mortgage and claimed priority over the alienee of the Kudivaram interest. The alienee who had purchased the Kudivaram interest set up his own priority as regards one of the items but said nothing as to the other two. The priority set up by the alienee was negatived and the decree directed the sale of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor. The alienee took objection in execution proceedings to the sale of the whole property inclusive of the Kudivaram interest. Held, that as regards one of the items in respect of which the alienee set up his priority, there was an adjudication negativing his claim and that that item was liable to be sold in execution. ———Construction — Mortgage decree—Description of property in the body of the mortgage deed and in the schedule—Mortgage of a Zemindari village—Residential buildings if included.

A mortgage decree directed the sale of a Zemindari village as described in the mortgage deed. In the body of the mortgage the property was thus described: "We (the mortgagors) have mortgaged to you for Rs. 15,000 the village of K. which is included in the four boundaries given below and which is attached to our Zemindari and which ancestrally belongs to us and is in our enjoyment . . . . . , and which is capable of yielding an annual melvaram kist of Rs. 3,000". At the foot of the document was given a specification of the mortgaged property in these terms: "The four boundaries of the village of K. attached to Zemin. (Then followed a description of the boundaries). The village of K situate within the four boundaries is inclusive of poramboke, nanjah 52 velis (and odd) punjah 204 velis (and odd). The total of nanjah and punjah is 256 velis (and odd), excluding the lands sold up to date, the remaining lands and all the rights and privileges I possess in the waste lands, poramboke and other lands attached thereto, all kinds of trees, topes, wells, ponds, tankbunds, etc., have been given as security." On a question arising as to whether the residential buildings of the Zemindar situate in the village of K. and within the four boundaries above-mentioned, were included in the security, Held (1) that the specification at the foot of the mortgage controlled the general words in the body of the deed; (2) that the words "and other lands attached thereto "occurring in the specification of the property were ejusdem generis with waste lands and poramboke, etc., enumerated previously; and that the residential buildings of the Zemindar did not pass under the mortgage. Under two consent decrees passed in 1866 A's party and B were jointly to carry on the vahivat of the land, each being entitled to one-half of the produce. the rent received was to be divided equally between them, and the land itself was not to be partitioned, and B. had power to grant a mirasi lease on the nazrana of not less than Rs. 500 to be divided in the proportion of one-fourth and three-fourths respectively. A's party conveyed their rights under the decree to B in 1890, who in 1891 mortgaged them by deposit of the conveyance deed. In 1891 B settled the property on his relative C. Now, the auction purchaser in the suit on the mortgage sued the representatives of C. (Deft. No. 1) for adjustment of their rights. Deft. No. 2 in the case was holding a mirasi lease from C, Held, that the plffs had no right to partition. The consent decrees of 1866 till set aside, operated as an estoppel and the clause therein as to partition cannot be ignored on the ground that the clause if resting merely on the agreement of the parties would be bad in law. That the plffs. were entitled to joint possession and that deft. No. 1 had no right to grant the lease to deft. No. 2 without plff's consent and that the lease was not binding on plff. and did not affect plff's right to joint possession. When in a second appeal one of the grounds is withdrawn so that a relief granted by the first Appellate Court in favour of the respondents is acquiesced in, but the second Appellate Court sets aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and restores the decree of the Court of first instance, the decree of the first Appellate Court so far as it granted the relief not challenged by the appellant becomes final. ——Costs—Order for—Several respondents.

If costs are awarded against a number of respondents without indicating the proportion in which those costs shall be borne by the different respondents such an order is always taken to mean that the respondents are jointly and severally liable for the costs, and the order for costs may be executed against any one of them, who will have a right of contribution against the others in a case of this nature. Date of.

——Date of appeal.

The date of the original decree and the valuation of the appeal are far more material than the grounds of appeal for determining whether the appeal is to be treated as one against the preliminary or the final decree or against both. Dependent-judgment.

——Dependent-judgments — Decrees based on a decree reversed in appeal—Effect of.

When a decree has been passed determining the extent of recurring liability in one suit and the decision is under appeal, other decrees passed on the authority of the first decision stand superseded by the decree passed in appeal and the fact that the subsequent suits were decided on the authority of the first decision and not on the ground of res judicata makes no difference. Divorce.

——Divorce—Procedure.

In all divorce cases the petitioner must come into the witness-box, petitioner must be sworn, and he must prove his case because, among other things, the Judge has to satisfy himself whether there is any collusion between the parties and he has further to satisfy himself as to the complete truth and honesty of the petition. ——Effect of—Decree not put into execution—Lapse of time—Declaration.

Where the plaintiff's title was established by a decree of 1907, the fact that the decree was not put into execution cannot affect the declaration of title made therein. DECREE—Ex parte.

Exparte.

——— Ex parte—Final decree ex parte—Partition suit—Decree passed without notice to defendant—Setting aside.

When a court adjourns a pending suit it is its duty to give notice of the adjourned date to the parties or their pleaders. Where after the preliminary decree in a partition suit the court appointed a commissioner for division by metes and bounds and on his report being received passed a final dercee without notice to the defendant, the ex parte decree is bad and should be set aside. (Piggott and Walsh, JJ.) DURGA RRASAD v. HET RAM. 20 A. L. J 912 : 1923 All. 79 (2).

——— Ex parte—Selling aside—Dismissal of prior application— Summonses not properly served.

DECREE—Ex parte.

——Ex parte—Fraud—Substituted service—Decree obtained by fraud if liable to be re-opened on ground of fraud.

Where a plff. falsely represents to the court that the deft. was away in a distant place and that summons should be served on him only by substituted means by advertisement in one of the papers of that place, and thus obtains an ex parte decree against him, the decree is obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation within S. 17 and the deft. can re-open the whole matter. 75 P. L. R. 1914 : 40 P. W. R. 1914 : 22 I. C. 549 : 65 P. R. 1914.

——Ex parte—Setting aside—Fraud—Perjury—Rival decree-holders.

In the absence of collateral fraud and collusion by the decree-holder and judgment-debtor it is not open to one decree-holder to attack a decree obtained by another holder against the same judgment-debtor seeking rateable distribution as not creating a valid debt and entitling the decree-holder to share in the distribution of the assets under S. 73, C. P. C. The mere fact that the decree was obtained ex parte on perjured evidence is not enough to vitiate it. (Sadasiva Iyer and Burn, JJ.) VENKATARAMA IYER v. THE SOUTH INDIAN BANK, LTD. 43 Mad. 381 : 38 M. L. J. 108 : 27 M. L. T. 66 : 11 L. W. 81 : 55 I. C. 452 : (1920) M. W. N. 92.

——Ex parte—Setting aside— Suppressing facts.

If a plff. suppresses a compromise from the knowledge of the court and obtains an ex parte decree against the deft the latter should sue to set aside the decree as such a decree is and might be treated as a nullity by the judgment-debtor one obtained by fraud. (Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ.) SUBBA IYAR v. KALLAPPAN PILLAI. 22 I. C 500.

——Ex parte decree—Setting aside—Fraud—What is.

A plff. who knowing his claim to be baseless puts a deft. into court and obtains an ex parte decree against him, obtains it by fraud and the decree on that account is liable to be cancelled. The plff. in such a case will not be allowed to plead that he was not guilty of fraudulent conduct. The very knowledge of the plff. amounts to fraud. (Lindsay, J. C.) MADARI SINGH v. RAM RATAN. 23 I. C 976 : 1 O. L. J. 92.

——Ex parte decree—Fraud—Non service of summons.

The mere fact that an ex parte decree has been passed does not show that there was no service of summons on the defendant and if anything, the presumption is that the Court passing the decree was satisfied that there had been a proper service of summons. It is incumbent on a person seeking to set aside the ex parte decree in a subsequent decree to prove that it was obtained by fraud. (Ross, J.) HARNARAIN PANDEY v. NAND KESHWAR PANDEY.

DECREE—Finality of.

——Ex parte—Setting aside.

That an ex parte decree is obtained by perjured evidence is no ground for setting it aside. Ex parte decree can be set aside by a suit only if fraud was practised in proceedings in Court and defendant was prevented by it. (Das and Adami, JJ.) RAM NARAIN LAL SHAW v. TOOKI SAO.
1 P. L. T. 119 : 2 U. P. L. R. (Pat.) 51 : 5 P. L. J. 259 : 58 I. C. 182 : (1920) Pat. 98.

—— Ex parte—Fraud—Onus—Perjury.

In a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud the plff. must prove that the decree was obtained by some fraud practised upon the Court and the fraud was actual, positive and intentional. The dishonesty of a claim on which a plff. obtains a decree, after following the procedure laid down for the trial of suits, cannot justify the setting aside of the decree in a subsequent suit. (Sultan Ahmed, J.) MAHANT KRISHNA DAYAL GIR v. LAKSHMI NARAIN. 56 I. C. 270 : 1 Pat. L. T. 486.

Finality of.

——Finality of—Suit to recover money recovered under subsisting decree does not lie.

It is clear and settled law that money recovered under a decree or judgment cannot be recovered back in a fresh suit or action whilst the decree or action under which it was recovered remains in force, but this rule of law rests upon this ground, that the original decree or judgment must be taken to be subsisting and valid until it has been reversed or superseded by some ulterior proceeding. If it has been reversed or superseded, the money recovered under it ought certainly to be refunded, and is recoverable either by summary process or by a new suit or action. The true question, therefore, in such cases is, whether the decree or judgment under which money was originally recovered has been reversed or superseded. ——Finality of—Decree passed without jurisdiction.

A decree passed without jurisdiction is not a nullity but can be set aside by appeal or revision; and till it is so set aside, it is good in spite of any defect in the jurisdiction. Plff. sued for accounts and valued his suit at Rs. 130. The Munsiff dismissed the suit and on appeal, the District Judge passed a preliminary decree and remanded the suit for taking accounts. The Munsiff found the amount exceeding his pecuniary jurisdiction and transferred the suit to Sub-Judge who ignored the District Judge's order and ordered a fresh trial of the suit. Held, that the proceedings on the valuation were not ultra vires that the Sub-Judge ought not to have ignored the District Judge's order but should have acted on the preliminary decree of the District Judge (Le Rossignol, J.) RAMJI LAL v. BUJAN LAL.

———Form of—Relief going beyond terms of plaint—Appeal.

Courts should determine by their decrees, the rights of parties as definitely as they can, by the evidence before them but a decree is not illegal merely because it is not mere specific. The relief claimed in the plaint in a suit by Hindu against Muhammadans was to restrain the latter by an injunction from interfering with the former's celebration of the Mariamman festival near a mosque with music. The decree extended the scope of the injunction by the words "and to carry on the procession with music without any restriction as to time" implying there by a right to go in procession with music past the mosque. Held, that the decree awarded a larger relief than that claimed in the plaint and the word "carry on the procession with music" must be expunged. P. Land Revenue Act. Per Walsh, J.—Once it is established that, whether by his own fraud or by neglect amounting to recklessness or wilfulness on the part of the guardian, the managing member of a joint Hindu family, has robbed the infant members of the family, no question of procedure or technical refinement can be allowed to stand in the way of the Civil Court, before which the matter is brought compelling him to restore the proceeds of his robbery. ——Minor—Negligence of guardian.

An infant plff. is as much bound as an adult by a judgment or order in a cause, even though there may have been irregularities in the conduct of it, in the absence of fraud or gross negligence on the part of his next friend. But in special circumstances, the infant may be allowed, on coming of age, to amend his claim or to institute a fresh action. An application for review of judgment is appropriate generally where it is possible that by a reconsideration of the judgment, minor's rights, which were lost by the fraud or negligence of the guardian can be restored. Where, on the other hand, the plff.'s object is to unripe a transaction which formed no part of the proceedings in the former suit and which had nothing whatever to do with that suit, it is obvious that an application for the review of the proceedings in that suit would be utterly ineffectual. ——Minor—Negligence of guardian—Onus.

If a minor is properly represented by a next friend or a guardian for the suit and there is no fraud or collusion on the part of the next friend or guardian and he is not guilty of gross negligence, the minor is as much bound by a decree or order made in a suit or proceeding to which he is a party as if he were of full age, and it can be executed against him or his property as the case may be, in accordance with law. It is not the duty of a guardian ad litem to raise frivolous or untenable defences. ———Setting aside — Compromise decree — Mistake—Unilateral mistake—Effect of revival of suit.

The law requires men in their dealings with each other to exercise proper vigilance and to apply their attention to those particulars which may be supposed to be within the reach of their observation and judgment and not to close their eyes to the means of information which are accessible to them. Where two parties are at arms length, either of them may prima facie remain silent, and avail himself of his superior knowledge as to facts and circumstances equally open to the observation of both or equally within the reach of their ordinary diligence. A consent decree could be set aside only on a ground which would justify a cancellation of the agreement on which the decree is passed. Though a suit does not lie to set aside a decree in a previous suit on the ground that the judge in passing that decree made a mistake, yet as an agreement may be rectified for an appropriate mistake so may also the consent decree based upon such agreement. A mistake on the part of one party only, not caused or actively assisted by the act of the other party, cannot invalidate the agreement or the decree based thereon. 43 C. 217, 34 C. L. J. 257: 8 C.W. ———Setting aside—Fraud— Jurisdiction — Objection to—Distinction between irregular exercise and want of jurisdiction.

Where a person is ex facie a party to a decree absolute on a mortgage, which was passed after hearing his objections, he could not sue to set aside the decree on the ground that at one stage of the case he was not properly heard. In the absence of fraud practised on the Court or of total want of jurisdiction in the Court, it is not competent to a party to a decree to sue for its rescission and destruction. A mere error in the decree or an irregularity in the procedure which led up to it, is not sufficient to sustain a fresh suit to set it aside. A suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud is not maintainable, if the fraud alleged in the plaint is that certain false allegations were made in the former plaint by the plaintiffs who proved those allegations by means of perjured evidence. It must be proved that some fraud has been practised upon the Court in the course of the judicial proceedings of which, the decree complained of was the result. (Lindsay, J.) ———Setting aside—Fraud — Suppression of facts—Suit for sale on mortgage—Claim for personal decree—Notice served on judgment-debtors.

The mortgagees applied for a decree under S. 90 of the T.P. Act. Notice of this application was duly served on the judgment-debtors. They did not appear and the court granted the decree asked for limited to the assets of the deceased mortgagor. In execution of this decree a house belonging to the judgment-debtors was attached. The judgment-debtors then sued to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud. Held, the suit was not maintainable. A party who after due notice allows the decree or order to be made without opposition is in the same position as a person who has had a decree or order made against him after contest, and fraud entitling a party to have a decree set aside by means of a suit must be actual positive fraud and a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and obtaining that decree by that contrivance. 18 C. Suppressing of evidence by a party does not amount to such a fraud as would entitle the other party to institute a suit to set aside the decree especially when the onus of proving that fact lies on such other party. 1923 Bom. 379.

———Setting aside—Fraud.

In a suit to set aside decree ex parte on the ground of fraud, when there is no finding that there was fraudulent suppression of the summons at the instance of the defendant (who was a plaintiff in the original case) even though the summons was not served on the plaintiffs (defendants in the original case), the decree cannot be set aside. The mere fact that a notice of a suit was not served on a party is not necessarily fraud. If, on the other hand, it is shown that there was any deliberate suppression of notice particularily in Further it is not necessarily fraud on the part of any person to put forward a claim which is in fact unfounded in law. A person may make a claim to which he is not entitled and his conduct is not fraudulent merely on that ground. It must be found that there were circun stances which establish that the over-claim, if there be one, was made with knowledge and for a fraudulent purpose. DECREE—Setting aside—Fraud.

———Setting aside—Fraud—Proof of.

To set aside a decree on the ground of fraud plaintiff must prove he was prevented from putting his case before the Court or that some trickery was practised on the Court. If the plaintiff fails to prove the fraud alleged in his plaint he cannot be allowed to adduce evidence to show that the claim agreed against him was otherwise wrongly decreed. A mere allegation of fraud in the pleadings or evidence is insufficient when the Judge after giving full opportunity to the parties to produce their evidence has decided, rightly or wrongly. (Daniels, A. J. C.) AJUDHIA PRASAD v. GURDAYAL. 22 O. C. 60 : 52 I. C. 101 (2.) : 1 U. P. L. R. 70. (J. C.)

———Setting aside—Fraud—If plaintiff can set up res judicata.

———Setting aside—Fraud—False allegations.

Where a decree is obtained upon allegations in a plaint which are subsequently found to be untrue in fact and it is also found that owing to certain circumstances the plaintiffs did not know them to be incorrect, the decree cannot be set aside on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. (Lindsay, J. C.) GIRJA DAYAL v. RAGHUMAL. 33 I. C. 481.

———Setting aside—Fraud—What constitutes.

A decree which is based on and solely due to fraud by a party can be held to be a nullity even though it cannot be said to have the effect of preventing an opposite party from placing his case properly before the Court. (Baillie, S. M.) TRIBHUVAN DAT v. BALAKRAM MISRA. 27 I. C. 587 : 2 O. L. J. 14.

———Setting aside—Fraud — Non-service of summons—Deliberate suppression—Effect.

———Setting aside—Fraud--Consent of parties—Compromise decree—Remedy of parties.

A court has inherent power to correct its own proceedings when it is satisfied that in passing a particular order it was misled by one of the parties. A distinction has been drawn between fraud practised upon the Court, where the question is whether there was a consent in fact of the parties to a decree, there is power to investigate the matter in a properly constituted application and to set aside the decree if satisfied that a party never in fact consented to it ; but where there was a consent decree in fact but a party alleges his consent was procured by fraud, the Court cannot investigate the fact either in review or in exercise of its inherent power and the only remedy is by suit. In other words, the factum of consent can be investigated in summary proceedings, but not so the reality of the consent. DECREE—Setting aside—Fraud.

———Setting aside—Fraud—Non-service of summons.

Where an ex parte decree is passed and a suit is brought to set it aside on the ground that the summons was deliberately suppressed with a view to prevent the party from defending the suit, there is a fraud committed and the court can set aside the decree. (Das and Macpherson, JJ.) MAHARANI JANKI KUER v BABO THAKUR RAI. 1923 Pat. 336 · 1924 P. 241.

———Setting aside—Fraud—What constitutes—Procedure on setting aside decree.

The test as to whether a suit lies to set aside a decree is whether there was fraud practised in relation to the proceedings in court by which the defendant in the original suit was prevented from placing his case before the court.

Where a decree is set aside as fraudulent, the suit cannot be re-heard. Where a suit is brought to set aside an ex parte decree as fraudulent, the onus is upon the plaintiff to show that the summons was suppressed, and he can show that the claim was false so as to lead to an inference as to the fraudulent suppression of summons. It is not upon the defendant to show that his claim in the previous suit was a true one. (Das and Bucknill, JJ.) DAMODAR PRASAD v. RAMSARUP KUMAR. 4 Pat. L. T. 102 : 1923 Pat. 137 : 1 P. L. R. 252 : 1923 P. 327.

———Setting aside—Fraud—Non-service of summons.

A suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of non-service of summons is not maintainable when the same ground was taken unsuccessfully in an application under O. 9. R. 13, but if other grounds of fraud are alleged, it will lie. (Mullick and Bucknill, JJ.) MAHANTH RAMRUP GOSHAIN v. MAHABIR SHAH. 74 I. C. 825 : P. 833.

———Setting aside—Fraud —Non-service o summons.

Mere non-service of summons is not a ground for a suit to set aside a decree. It must be shown that the opposite party was guilty of fraud in causing the suppression of summons and thereby keeping the plaintiff in ignorance of the suit. (Jwala Prasad and Adami, JJ.) RANI CHHATTRA KUMARI v. PANDA RADHA MOHAN SINGARI. 3 P. L. T. 451: 1922 P. 291.

———Setting aside—Fraud—What is.

A suit to set aside a previous judgment on the ground of fraud is not maintainable in the absence of any contrivance by which the person suing was prevented from placing his case before the court in the previous suit. Fraud must first be established as a fraud in relation to the proceedings in court before the record can be examined for the purpose of giving one court opportunity to differ from another court on a question of fact. 10 Ch. ——Setting aside — Fraud —Perjured evidence.

The mere fact that the claim in a suit decreed ex parte was supported by perjured evidence is no ground for the maintainability of another suit to set it aside. 16 C. W. N. 1002 ; 18 C. W. N. 447 ; 38 Mad. 203, Foll. The principle is also equally applicable to a false case, where the opposite party has beeen duly served with notice and owing to laches has not appeared and the suit has been decreed ex parte. If notice had not been served or if the defendants were prevented by the plaintiff from appearing by tricks or misrepresentation, there would be some extrinsic collateral act in the nature of fraud vitiating the previous adjudication. (Coutts and Adami, JJ.) KRIPASINDU PANIGRAHI v. NANDU CHARAN. 56 I. C. 606 : 1 Pat. L. T. 206.

——Setting aside — Fraud—Subject-matter not existing.

If a person obtains a decree, the subject-matter of which has no existence, the court can set aside such decree on the ground that it was fraudulently procured. If the subject-matter exists and the decree is obtained by false and perjured evidence this is not sufficient, by itself, to set aside the decree. (Atkinson and Manuk, JJ.) CHATTEN SINGH v. RADHA KISHUN. 50 I. C. 451 : 4 P. L. J. 87.

——Setting aside—Fraud —Suppression of process.

——Setting aside — Fraud and collusion—Compromise being beyond scope of suit.

A suit for setting aside a decree passed upon a compromise on the ground that it was obtained collusively and fraudulently must be dismissed on failure of the plff. to prove the allegations of fraud and collusion. Such a decree ought not to be set aside merely because it embodies a compromise which went beyond and was intended by all parties to go beyond the lands in dispute in the suit. Such a compromise is admissible to prove an admission by a party to it. (Chamier, C. J. and Sharfuddin, J.) MAHADEO PAHAN v BISSESAR RAM. 43 I. C. 772 : 1917 Pat. 181.

——Setting aside —Fraud—Suppression of summons.

A suit to set aside a decree can lie solely on the ground that the summons has been fraudulently suppressed. C. P. C., S. 108 is no bar to such a suit. 28 C. 475 (P. C.) Rel. (Sharfuddin and Roe, JJ.) CHIRANJIB LAL CHODHAY v DOULTEA. 41 I. C. 677 : 2 P. L. W. 20.

——Setting aside—Fraud—Proof of.

The jurisdiction to impugn a previous decree on the ground of fraud is beyond question but must be exercised with care and proof must be required of actual and positive fraud, i. e., a meditated and intellectual contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts and a decree obtained by that contrivance. (Mullick and Atkinson, JJ.) MOHAN KRISHNA DAR v. HAR PRASAD. 40 I. C. 2.

DECREE—Setting aside—Grounds for.

——Setting aside—Fraud—Nature of.

Although a decree can be set aside on the ground of fraud, if the fraud is extraneous to the suit it is not open to one Court to entertain a suit to set aside a decree of another court, the sole point being whether the latter court erred in believing the evidence before it. ——Setting aside—Grounds—Consent decree—Unilateral—Mistake—Effect of revival of suit.

The law requires men in their dealings with each other to exercise proper vigilance and to apply their attention to those particulars which may be supposed to be within the reach of their observation and judgment and not to close their eyes to the means of information which are accessible to them. Where two parties are at arms length, either of them may prima facie remain silent and avail himself of his superior knowledge as to facts and circumstances equally open to the observation of both or equally within the reach of their ordinary diligence. A consent decree could be set aside only on a ground which would justify a cancellation of the agreement on which the decree is passed. Though a suit does not lie to set aside a decree in a previous suit on the ground that the Judge in passing that decree made mistake, yet as an agreement may be rectified for an appropriate mistake so may also the consent decree based upon such agreement. A mistake on the part of one party only, not caused or actively assisted by the act of the other party cannot invalidate the agreement or the decree based thereon. 43 C. 217; 34 C. L. J. 257 : 8 C. ———Setting aside—Grounds—Reliefs going beyond the prayer in the plaint.

In a suit to set aside a decree in a prior suit as having been passed without jurisdiction the facts found were these. In the plaint in the previous suit it was alleged that a certain leasehold property was pledged as security for the unpaid commission or royalty and though no specific prayer was inserted for enforcement of that charge, the facts upon which the charge might have been asked for were stated in the plaint. The plaintiff prayed for a much wider relief, namely, possession of the leasehold property according to the terms of the kabuliyat which gave him a right to re-enter. The Court passed a decree for a certain amount and directed that in the event of the same not being paid within a certain time, the leasehold property was to be sold. Held, that in the prior suit a case had been made which could serve as a foundation for the relief granted in the prior suit, though it had not been specifically asked for, consequently it could not be said that the relief was not within the scope of the prior suit and that the decree in the prior suit was not without jurisdiction. Under O. 7, R. 7, C. P. C., it is competent to the court to grant a general or other relief even though it had not been asked for. (*Miller, C. ———Setting aside—Grounds for—Compromise decree.

———Setting aside—Grounds for—Mortgage decree absolute—Application for—After limitation—Effect—Notice to judgment-debtor—Want of.

A suit will not lie to set aside a decree absolute for sale in a mortgaged suit, merely on the ground that it was obtained after the limitation period, nor can it be set aside on the ground that no notice of the application therefor was given to the mortgagor, as no statutory provision requires it to be given, but if an application to set aside the decree is made within 30 days of the date of knowledge of the sale on the ground of failure to give notice, the Court has inherent power to set it aside. (Chapman and Roe, JJ.) BHAIGA PARIDA v. GANNATH KHANDAI. 46 I. C. 569.

———Setting aside—Grounds for—Mistake—Money paid under compulsion of legal process—If can be recovered.

The principles which guided the Chancery Court in granting relief on the ground of mistake ought in similar cases here to be adopted. A mistake vitiating a decree and amounting to an abuse of the Court's process can be rectified in an independent suit, but not a mistake which amounts only to a mere irregularity. Money paid under compulsion of a legal process cannot be recovered as money had and received unless it was realised by fraud or some unconscionable dealing or by a grave mistake which a Court of Equity will relieve against. Setting aside—Jurisdiction.

———Setting aside—Jurisdiction—Void and voidable decrees—Distinction between—Absence of jurisdiction—Irregular assumption of jurisdiction—Minor—Guardian—Appointment of.

There is a clear distinction between a judgment which is voidable and that which is void An erroneous judgment is a voidable judgment for the argument that a judgment is erroneous assumes both the regularity of the procedure and the jurisdiction of the court to render it. An erroneous judgment is one which, though regularly rendered, is contrary to law or facts, and is, therefore, liable to be reversed by an appellate tribunal. An irregular judgment is also a voidable judgment ; but the distinction between an erroneous judgment and an irregular one is this, that whereas an erroneous judgment will always be reversed by an Appellate Court, an irregular judgment will be reversed in appeal or ignored in a collateral proceeding only when it is shown that the irregularity in the proceeding has affected the merits of the case between the parties. A void judgment, on the other hand, is a judgment where there was a total lack of jurisdiction in the Court to render it. Such a judgment is a mere nullity It is not necessary to set it aside. It can be completely disregarded whenever it is pleaded in support of a claim or in answer to a claim. There is also a distinction between existence of jurisdiction and exercise of jurisdiction. Where there does not exist any jurisdiction to try and determine the cause, the judgment is void, and it can be impeached collaterally. But where there does exist such a jurisdiction, but in the exercise of the jurisdiction, the Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity. the judgment is voidable, and it can be vacated in an appropriate proceeding either by the Court which rendered it, or, under the C. P. Code, by the Appellate Court, either in appeal or in revision. 33 Cal. 68 ; 24 C. W. N. 723 Foll. Jurisdiction is of four kinds :—(1) Territorial jurisdiction, (2) Pecuniary jurisdiction, (3) Jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and (4) Jurisdiction of the person. Jurisdiction as to person is conferred on the Court by suing the person in a court competent to try the cause as against that person before the Court. Where the conditions for the assumption of jurisdiction as against a person exist, the authority of the Court to try and determine the cause as against him is complete, and the mode which the Court adopts to bring that person before it affects the exercise of jurisdiction, and not its existence. A judgment will not be regarded as a nullity, although it has been rendered in direct contravention of a statutory provision. 21 C. 66 ; 25 Bom. 337 : 24 C. W. N. 723 Foll. A minor is not bound by a decree passed against him in a suit where his guardian showed gross negligence such as not setting up a good defence of which he must have been aware. Fraud and collusion are not the only grounds on which a decree against the minor can be set aside. DEED—Construction—Ambiguity.

———Construction— Ambiguity — Recitals — Operative portion—What passes under the deed —Zerait—Raiyat—Bihar.

Per Dawson Miller, C.J.—Where there is an ambiguity in the operative part of the deed one should look back to the recitals and be guided by what is therein contained in interpreting the ambiguity. This canon of construction, however, does not apply in all cases where there is a doubt or difficulty in the construction of a document. If one is satisfied upon the natural construction of the operative part of the deed that certain property passes notwithstanding that the construction may be difficult, the recitals have no binding force.

Per Das, J.—Recitals in a conveyance are subordinate to the operative part and where the operative part is doubtful and it is impossible to say, on a mere reading of it, to which properties it refers, then the recitals can and ought to be used to explain its meaning. While for the purpose of construing the operative part, the whole of the instrument may be referred to, yet the recitals leading up to it are more likely to furnish the key to its construction than the subsidiary clauses of the deed. ——Construction—Conflicting recitals—Description of property.

When the premises is sufficiently described, as by giving the particular name of close, or otherwise, an erroneous additional description will be rejected as a 'false demonstration,' but if there is not this certainty in the first description as if it is expressed in general terms and a particular description is added, the latter controls the former and limits the generality of the earlier description. Where there is a conflict between the two descriptions, the question which the court has to consider is, whether the words constituting the second description should be rejected as a false description, or whether they should be read as words of restriction. The test is this, if the first description is sufficient in itself to identify the land which is conveyed, then, if there is a conflict between the first description and the second description, the second description ought to be rejected as a false description; but if the first description is not sufficient by itself to identify the lands intended to be sold, then the second description ought to be read as restricting the operation of the grant. The question then is this: Is the first description sufficient in itself to identify the lands in dispute? (Das and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.) GOPAL MISSER v. PARTAP MANDAL.

A Parsi lady executed a deed of settlement of which she appointed one M. and her son Rustomji the trustees, and by which she settled the immoveable properties for herself for life, and after her death on Rustomji for his life and after Rustomji's death in trust for his "sons and their male heirs in equal shares absolutely as tenants in common." The deed contained no power of revocation. There was a maintenance clause referring to the share to which an infant son or his male heirs should be entitled. The settlor first died and her son died next himself leaving three sons. Held, that the three grandsons of the settlor took on the settlor's son's death the trust properties absolutely in equal shares as tenants-in-common. A deed of sale relating to certain shops had a covenant in it that in case of eviction by municipality, the purchaser would be entitled to recover the purchase-money. The shops were transferred to the plaintiff by a deed of gift, which purported to transfer all the rights to realise rents to do repairs, etc., subject to the terms by which the donor was bound. On eviction by the Municipality the plff. brought a suit to recover the purchase-money from the original owner who had sold it to his donor. Held, that he was not entitled to recover the purchase-money inasmuch as that right was not assigned to him. A clause in a deed of gift that the donor was to become entitled to the properties gifted on the happening of a specified contingency is not invalid or opposed to Hindu Law. A Hindu who had been sentenced to transportation for life made a gift of his properties to a relation of his subject to a condition that the donee should hand over the properties to the donor in case he returned to his native village after the termination of his sentence. The donee alienated the properties gifted to strangers who had notice of the terms of the gift. ———Construction — Grant — Conveyance by executor, also having beneficial interest—"All estate, right or title"—What passes—Bona fide purchaser.

It is a settled rule of construction that the meaning of a deed is to be decided by the language used, interpreted in its natural sense. An executor who had some beneficial interest in the estate of the testator, joined with other beneficiaries in the conveyance of a portion of the estate to bona fide purchasers of value. Though the executor did not purport to convey in his capacity as executor, the deed stated that all the right and title of the vendors were conveyed. Held, that the conveyance was of the whole title vested in the executor and not of the beneficial interest alone. The plain terms of the conveyance could not be altered by inferences and speculations drawn from the conduct of the parties. The direction to the trustees in the trust in the settlement was to pay to the widow of the settlor within thirteen months of the settlor's death out of the balance of the "income, accruing within the first thirteen months" the Rs. 80,000. The trustees were further directed to divide the remaining balance of the income "arising or accruing" during the first thirteen months after the settlor's death among the four beneficiaries named in equal shares. The direction in the deed operated under the form of a trust for sale. The balance of the proceeds of sale and income to be derived from it were to be held as subsequently directed, "except the income arising or accruing due for and within the first thirteen months after the settlor's death," as to which there was reference back to the direction. Held, the character of payments such as those directed is prima facie discontinuous at common law. No doubt, the settlor could have given directions which would have modified this character, or at least, have deprived it of the consequences arising from its discontinuity. But such directions would have had to be clear and unambiguous in order to have the result of varying the rights defined by the general law. There was no such distinctness in direction in the deed as would have been required to have this effect. (P. 174, C. 2. P 175. C. 1). (Viscount Haldane, PIROZSHAW BOMANJEE PETIT v. BAI COOLBAI.

In construing an instrument of settlement carrying out a decision of the Court, Courts ought to take for their guidance the rule that, if possible, such a document should be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat.

A deed of settlement provided that on the death of the last three persons i.e., Raja Hanwant Singh, Raja Rampal Singh and Dirgaji Kuar, the mother of Raja Rampal Singh, Babu Lachman Singh the second son of Raja Hanwant Singh and his heirs and representatives shall succeed to the entire Rampur Kaithala estate as provided by S. 22 of Act I of 1869. But the said Babu Lachman Singh shall not interfere in any way with the said ilaqa, besides the six villages which he has received under S. 8 during the lifetime of Raja Rampal Singh and his mother Dirgaj Kuar. Held, in the first place, the words "heirs and representatives" are to be treated as words of limitation and not of purchase, that is they are merely intended to express the absolute estate which it was proposed to give to Lachman as distinguished from the life estates which had preceded it. This being so the later words in the sentence may be regarded either as an idle attempt to derogate from the grant previously made and therefore to be rejected, or as ———Construction—Principles—Sicca Rupees.

Sicca rupees though coined by the Company, having never been known as the "Company's Sicca rupee" the expression "Company's Sicca rupees" used in a kabuliyat is ambiguous. The intention of the parties must be ascertained, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the conduct of the parties, the date of the document, the stamp duty paid on the document, and a reference to the current coin in a portion of the kabuliyat. ———Construction—Principles.

If the terms of a contract are clear and unambiguous, the Court is bound to give effect to them without considering how far they may be reasonable or otherwise and the court, in construing it cannot speculate about possible intention of the parties, but is concerned only with their intention as expressed by the words they have deliberately used, to guess the intention of an average man is dangerous. ———Construction—Principles—Intention of parties—Position of the parties and position of affairs at the time of the agreement, to be considered.

In construing a deed the Court has to take into consideration the position of the parties who executed the document and the position of affairs at the time the agreement was entered into and the real intention of the parties. The whole of the document with all its terms must be looked to. If expressions used in the deed are capable of both constructions contended for, by both the parties, then that construction should be adopted which is consistent with the law to which the parties are subject. ——— Construction—Principles.

An instrument must receive a construction according to the plain meaning of the words and sentences therein contained, i.e., in their grammatical and ordinary sense unless the context shows otherwise. ———Construction — Principles— Adoption—Power to widow to adopt son—Reversioner giving assent for consideration.

DEED—Construction—Principles.

The deeds and contracts of the people of India should be liberally construed. The real meaning of the parties should be more regarded than mere form of expression and literal sense. In construing such deeds and contracts regard must be had to all the attendant circumstances of the transaction. Where a widow executed a deed of adoption, by which she adopted a boy to her husband, reciting in the deed that the adoption was in compliance with the expressed wishes of her husband, one of the reversionary heirs sued for a declaration that the deed of adoption was invalid against his reversionary interest and obtained a decree to that effect and subsequently executed an agreement by which he gave the widow authority to adopt any one she liked and as a consideration for this concession he received immediate possession of a large portion of the estate. Accordingly the widow again adopted the same boy saying "mulbanna apna qurar dekariqrar karte hainke Nmazkur hamara mutabanna hai" After the death of the reversioners the widow, her mother-in-law and reversioner's grandson sued for possession of his share in the estate. Held, that the intention of the parties must not be gathered from the strict terms used in the agreement and the deed of adoption, but that the circumstances of the case must also be considered; that the intention of the parties was that the widows should appoint an heir to the last male holder of the estate and that the adoption was binding on the reversioners and his heirs. ——Construction—Principles.

In construing a document a Judge should not be guided by evidence as to what the parties meant though he can look at the surrounding circumstances to find out the subject matter of their contract. The absence of words in a deed of gift that the estate was to be enjoyed from "son to grandson" indicates that the donor granted only the limited interest. ——Construction — Principles — Maxim — 'Ut tres magis valeat quam pariat.'

——Construction—Principles of—Interpretation of other deeds.

It would not be safe to import considerations into the question of construction of a document which might have arisen or may arise with reference to the question of construction of documents. In the case of construction of documents the only question is how the law is to be applied to the particular facts put before the court. (*Wazir Hasan, A. J. ——Construction—Principles— Repugnancy, to be avoided—'Year,' meaning of.

It is not desirable to impute repugnancy to the terms of a document where a consistent intention can be found from the study of the document as a whole. A year usually means a period of twelve months but the context of a document may show that a particular year, ending with a specified

47 I. C. 161 : 5 O. L. J. 263.

———Construction—Principles of.

Where a word is capable of several interpretations, the Court will adopt that interpretation which will be consistent with the existence of a contract, which persons of ordinary intelligence would make and reject the interpretation involving the acceptance of a contract which no sensible person would be likely to agree to. Where the terms are however clear the mere fact that the bargain becomes unconscionable if a particular meaning is given affords no reason for holding that the intention of the parties was otherwise. 40 I. C. 42 : 4 O. L. J. 148.

———Construction—Principles.

No assumption concerning the nature of the legal effect which a document is intended to produce should be made but the construction of a document must be based upon the intention of the parties to the document, which depends upon a consideration of the evidence disclosing the circumstances attending its execution. ———Construction—Principles—Harmony.

A document ought to be construed so as to make each part expound the other so as to make all the parts agree. Where a doubt in a deed can be removed by construing it against the grantor, it will be so done especially where the deed is supported by valuable consideration. A general and definite description of the mortgaged property in a deed of mortgage cannot be restricted by its enumerative description following the general description. (Das and Bucknill, JJ.) KALIKA NAND v. SHIV NANDAN: 63 I. C. 625.

———Construction—Principles--Mortgage-bond—Interest.

DEED—Construction—Sale Certificate.

In construing the mortgagor's liability to pay an enhanced rate of interest the bond should be considered as a whole and a construction most favourable to the mortgagor should be given. Where a suit by a dispossessed usufructuary mortgagee is brought more than six years after dispossession, enhanced interest should not be allowed. Where a registered Dastbardarinama was executed by a widow stating that she relinquished all her rights as widow in the estate of her husband held by her in favour of her next reversioner on his agreeing to pay her a certain amount which was never paid, held, that the deed was not a sale-deed but a deed of release by which the widow surrendered her life-estate in her husband's lands. Since no part of the consideration for the surrender of her life-estate was paid to her by the reversioner, the agreement embodied in the deed was void and unenforceable. A document purported to be a perpetual lease of 5 bighas, 5 biswas and 8 dhurs for a premium of Rs. 493, the rent reserved being Rs. 5-5-0. The lease went on to provide that the lessee, generation after generation, shall be entitled to remain in possession of the leased property as pattadar and would have the right to have his name recorded in the revenue papers as tenant and perpetual pattadar; that he would be liable to pay the rent reserved year after year and instalment after instalment; in the event of the rent falling in arrears, the lessor would have all the rights of an owner with respect to its realisation, but that there would be no right to have the lease cancelled, the rent enhanced or to eject the lessee. It was clear that the lessor and his representatives would for all time to come have the right to recover the rent reserved though it may be small. They would also under the law have the right of reversion in case the line of the lessees became extinct. As under the terms of this document the proprietary interest of the lessor had not ceased, there could possibly be no escheat to Government The liability to pay Government revenue rested on the lessor, and he could not escape it.

Held, it could not be open to any of the representatives of the lessee to deny that the transaction was anything other than a lease or to refuse to pay rent. In spite of the direction as to non-enhancement of the rent, it was clear that if at the next settlement the Government revenue were to increase the lessee would be bound under section 49 of the Agra Tenancy Act to submit to an enhancement of rent or to allow the lease to be avoided. Any other construction would nullify the object of the security bond. The only materiality of the security bond would be if it gave some new security and some fresh liability, and therefore the natural construction to put upon what is indicated by the use of the imperfect but definite expression "pledge" is that the fresh liability of the three signatories personally was the new security introduced. Mere authority to adopt though revocable and taking effect on the death of a person cannot be considered a will though the document is styled as such. There must be a disposition of property in addition to the authority to adopt if it is to be treated as a will. DEED—Construction—Will or gift.

——Construction—Will or gift—A deed in form is no will except under special circumstances —Appointment of a hukdar under a deed irrevocable.

If an instrument is a deed in a form, it should not be treated as a will unless there are special circumstances compelling the Court to treat it as a will. ———Construction—Words—Question of inference from words used—Distinction between.

The distinction as to how far a decision upon the contents of a document is a question of law and how far it is a question of fact may be thus stated. The expression "construction' as applied to a document at all events as used by English Lawyers means two things : first, the meaning of the words ; and secondly, their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. The meaning of the words is a question of fact and the effect of the words is a question of law. (Stuart, J.) SHEIKH MUHAMMAD SHAKUR v. ABDUL GHANI. 1923 All. 362.

———Construction—Word– Gift by husband to wife—"Malik" meaning of—Principles of construction– Mokurari lease, if can be granted.

Where a husband gifts properties to his wife as "malik", but the instrument of gift contains limitations as regards alienation and also provisions as regards final devolution, held, the intention of the donor was clear, i.e., to provide for the donee and also for the ultimate devolution of the property. The grant is in effect the grant of an ordinary Hindu widow's estate. The absence of a clause restraining the donee from granting a mokurari lease, does not lead to the conclusion, she is empowered to grant it. It is always dangerous to construe the words of one document by the construction put upon similar words in another document. All the clauses of the particular document must be looked at and given effect to, ignoring none as redundant or contradictory The word "malik" is not a term of art, and does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken, but the ownership of whatever that estate may be. "Mai warisan" adds nothing to this meaning and "Kayem mokamiyan" adds nothing to it. The whole phrase means no more than the heir who by law would be entitled to succeed to the estate. Where according to the custom of the locality the words Putra poutradik mean only heirs male, it follows that the custom of the locality must be that words "Putra poutra dhik mai warisan kayem mokamiyan" mean equally only heirs male. 21 C L. ———Material alteration—Effect of.

A material alteration of an instrument is one which causes it to speak a language different in legal effect from what it originally spoke. The alteration must change the legal identity or character of the instrument. It is the effect of the Act upon the instrument and not the particular manner in which it is done, that is material. The alteration must be in a material part of the instrument and must also affect the rights and obligations of the party thereto. An alteration of a document after its execution and registration in good faith to carry out the original intention of the party does not vitiate the instrument, arrest of the accused and summons for certain witnesses. The Dt. Magistrate took up the case himself, framed a charge and convicted the accused under R. 29 of the rules under the Defence of India Act. Held, that the proceedings of the Dt. Magistrate were irregular in their initiation, because the Magistrate did not give the accused option of being tried by another Court, as he was bound to do, if he was taking cognizance of the offence upon information received under S. 191 (c) of the Cr. P. C. If the tenant's statement was a complaint the Magistrate ought to have taken from him a sworn declaration of its truth before issuing warrants. DEKHAN AGRICULTURISTS' RELIEF ACT (XVII of 1879).

——— Ss. 1, 3 and 11—Applicability of—Agriculturist in other provinces—Extension of Act—Meaning of

The Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not applicable to an agriculturist who earns his livelihood wholly and principally by agriculture at Dera Ghazi Khan, outside the Bombay Presidency or at any place to which the Act has not

——— S. 2—Agriculturist—Income from district where Act does not apply is not to be considered.

Income from lands not in a district, to which the Dekhan Agriculturists Relief Act applies cannot properly be treated as income, from agricultural sources, but must be treated as non-agricultural income for to constitute a person as "an agriculturist" for the purposes of the Act he must earn his livelihood principally by agriculture carried on within the limits of a district to which the Act applies. ——— S. 2—Agriculturist — Test of Joint family.

If a family is joint, the only way to test if the members are agriculturists is to ascertain what is the joint income of the family provided they are living together. If the income from the land cannot amount or falls far short of the real income, they are not agriculturists within the meaning of the Act. (*Macleod, C. ——S. 3 (y)—Scope of.

Under S. 3 (y) read with S. 10-A, the intention of the legislature seems to be that the nature of the suit under Cl. A suit to redeem a mortgage under the provisions of the Dek. Agr. Rel. Act with a prayer for cancellation of a sale-deed subsequently executed by plff.'s mother of some of the mortgaged lands to defts. is outside the scope of S. 3 (z) of the Act, because the suit is not a suit for redemption

——S. 10-A—Sale or mortgage—Oral evidence—Admissibility of—Suit for partition.

For S. 10-A of Dekhan Agri. Relief Act to be applicable it is only necessary that an agriculturist must be a party to the suit and that some transaction shall be in issue entered into by such agriculturist or the person, if any, through whom he claims, which shall be of such a nature that the rights and liabilities of the parties thereunder are triable wholly or in part under Chapter III of the Act. S. 10-A is not limited to suits mentioned in S. 3, cl. (w) (y) or (z). (Macleod, C. J. and Coyajee J.) HALLAPA KALLAPPA v. IRAPPA GIRI MALLAPPA. 24 Bom. L. R 406 1922 Bom. 415.

——S. 10-A—Sale—Contemporaneous agreement to retransfer—Kabuliat—Evidence Act, S. 92.

Defendant executed a sale deed in favour of plaintiff. At the same time there was an oral agreement to reconvey on payment of purchase-money, and an unregistered kabuliat was executed subsequently embodying the terms of the agreement. In plaintiff's suit for possession, defendants pleaded that the transaction was only a mortgage. Held, S. 10-A of the Dekhan Agriculturists Relief Act, empowers a court, notwithstanding the provisions of S. 92 of the Evidence Act, to inquire into and determine the real nature of such a transaction. The plaintiff whose title is based on the sale deed, cannot succeed, if defendants prove the transaction to be only a mortgage. (Kennedy, J. C. and Raymond, A. J C.) HAMBIRKHAN v. MURIJMAL. 15 S. A decree for money was obtained ex parte on the Original Side of the Bombay High Court against the defendant who was described as a merchant in the plaint. During the course of the execution of the decree deft applied for instalments on the ground he was an agriculturist. Held, that the defendant could not raise the plea that he was an agriculturist in execution proceedings as the point must be deemed to have been decided against when the original side of the High Court entertained the suit and decreed it. If he were an agriculturist the High Court would not have had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and as the deft. was not an agriculturist at the date of the decree he could not raise the plea in execution proceedings. 37 B. 486 Ref. ——S. 22—Immoveable property of agriculturist—Attachment and sale in execution of money decree—Exemption—Limits of.

The result of S. 22 is that when immoveable property is sought to be attached in execution of a money decree, and it is found that at the time of attachment such property belongs to an agriculturist, then it shall be free from the attachment. But it does not follow that such protection continues when the agriculturist to whom the property belongs dies and the property goes into the hands of his heir or legal representative who is not an agriculturist. The section denotes that the only question to be decided when immoveable property is sought to be attached for a money decree, is whether at that time it belongs to an agriculturist or not, and it is not permissible to read into the section any further words so as to make the section read that property should still be protected from attachment if it once belonged to an agriculturist judgment-debtor, although it has passed by inheritance or otherwise into the hands of a person who is not an agriculturist. The object of the section was to protect in the hands of an agriculturist immoveable property belonging to him from which he derived the greater part of his income and the necessity for such protection is at once removed when such property passes into the hands of a person who is not an agriculturist. The plff. afterwards brought a suit. Held, that the proceedings before the conciliator from the date of first application for the previous certificate to the date of the grant of a fresh one on the joint application, were continuous and so pltf.'s suit is within time as he must get the deduction of that period from the usual period prescribed for his suit. DIVORCE ACT (IV OF 1869).

—— Ss. 2 and 7—*Jurisdiction—Non-domiciled parties.

Per Macleod, C. J. :—Jurisdiction in matrimonial causes was not based on a so called matrimonial domicile when the Indian Councils Act was passed in 1861.

The Indian Divorce Act does not confer jurisdiction of the Courts to dissolve the marriages of non-domiciled parties. Relief not involving the status of the parties may be granted under the Act if the conditions of residence is satisfied. Undoubtedly a country by its Municipal Law may lay down its own tests for creating jurisdiction within its own boundaries even in cases where the status of the parties is involved. When the jurisdiction of the Court is exercised according to the rules of International Law, as in the case where the parties have their domicile within its forum its decree dissolving their marriage ought to be respected by the Tribunals of every civilized country. The Court in considering a petition for divorce will follow the principles of International Law, whatever doubts may have been felt on the question until the decision in Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier. 1895 A.C. 517. As the legislature has not directly given to the Indian Courts the power to dissolve marriages between non-domiciled parties, the District Court has no power by implication even if the argument that residence has been made the test of jurisdiction was a sound one.

Marten, J :—Jurisdiction over residence, with reference to judicial separations as opposed to decrees for dissolution of the marriage itself. is now well recognised by the English Courts as a principle of private International Law and a similar jurisdiction is exercised by the Bombay High Court or its predecessor the supreme court for 100 years. History of the Court for divorce and matrimonial causes in England discussed.

The Court has not any jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage by reason of the appearance of the parties without protest. The High Court has no jurisdiction to dissolve their marriage, notwithstanding that it was solemnized in India and that adultery was committed in India. But on the other hand, the Court has jurisdiction to grant the husband a decree for judicial separation and to provide for the custody of the children. This is because the word 'reside' in S. 2 of the Divorce Act should be construed as such and not as meaning 'domiciled', and because under S. 7 the principles of the English Courts should be applied which in such cases will grant judicial separations to non-domiciled parties. Having regard to S. 7, Indian Courts give or withhold relief on the principles of jurisdiction now finally established in the English Courts and it is no objection to their so doing, that those principles as now enunciated are not the same as those enunciated in the English Court of Appeal in Niboyet v. Niboyet, 4 P. D. 1. The jurisdiction to dissolve a marriage as opposed to granting a judicial separation did not exist until it was given by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857.

Crump, J. :—The jurisdiction, whatever it may be, is conferred by the Act in express terms, and the provisions which confer that jurisdiction are not in any way subject to any rules or principles which may from time to time be laid down by English Courts. Those provisions, confer upon the Courts in India jurisdiction to give decrees for dissolution of marriage between British subjects domiciled in England who in other respects are within the conditions prescribed by the Act. ——S. 2—*Residence—Meaning of.

——S. 2—Marriage— Solemnization—Proof of date and place of marriage.

In a divorce case before a final decree is passed the Court must definitely come to a finding on the question whether the marriage was solemnized in India as stated and on what date, though the statement in a verified petition for dissolution of marriage contains the allegation that the parties were married to each other in British India according to the doctrine of Christianity. ——S. 2—Person professing Christianity—Ex-communication—Effect—Hindu Law—Marriage—Dissolution—Conversion of either party to Christianity—Effect--Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, XXI of 1886.

A person does not cease to profess Christianity within the meaning of S. 2 of the Indian Divorce Act of 1869 merely because she has been excommunicated by the sect or the church to which she belongs. The question of profession of Christianity is a question of her own action and not of the action of her church. The conversion to Christianity of one of two married Hindus does not dissolve the marriage. The convert can under the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act of 1866, obtain dissolution of the marriage by application to the Court first of all for restitution of conjugal rights and then after the lapse of a year for dissolution of the marriage if conjugal rights are refused. ——Ss. 2 and 7—Petitioner of English domicile—Indian Courts have no jurisdiction to dissolve marriage.

Courts in India are not empowered to decree dissolution of the marriage between persons not domiciled within their jurisdiction. The provisions of S. 2 as to the residence, no doubt, apply to cases when the parties are domiciled in India, but where the parties are domiciled in England they cannot override the express provisions in S. 7 of the Act. Courts in India are bound by the provisions of S. 7 of the Act, and give relief on the same principles, namely, that jurisdiction depends on domicile. (*Robinson, C. (Bucknill, J.) ADELAIDE CHRISTIANA LISH v. DAVID LISH. (1923) Pat. 127 : 1 P.L.R. 129 : 1923 P. 301.

——— Ss. 4, 18 and 19—Validity of marriage under Christian Marriage Act—Fraud—Consideration of.

S. 4 of the Divorce Act does not preclude the Court from considering whether a marriage was duly solemnised under the provisions of the Christian Marriage Act and from declaring a marriage null and void on grounds other than those contained in S. 18 of the Divorce Act. No degree of deception can avail to set aside a marriage knowingly made unless the party imposed upon has been deceived as to the person and thus has given no consent at all. Fraud means fraud upon the other party to the marriage and does not include fraud upon a third party who granted the license. The word 'solemnised' in S. 5 of the Christian Marriage Act means "Celebrated" and deals with the ceremony only and the words " rules, rites, ceremonies, and customs of the church" mean only the rules, etc. as to ritual, and do not include rules or customs as to the capacity of the parties. In a suit for declaration of nullity of marriage, the question is not whether the marriage is void under the law of the church but whether it is void by the law of the country. (Young, J.). CONSTERDINE v. SMAINE. 47 I. C. 544 : 11 Bur. L. T. 69.

——— S. 7—Procedure—Decree nisi—Petitioner to go into the witness box.

In all divorce cases the petitioner must come into the witness box, petitioner must be sworn, and he must prove his case because among other things, the judge has to satisfy himself whether there is any collusion between the parties and he has further to satisfy himself as to the complete truth and honesty of the petition. Where this procedure had not been followed, the High Court set aside the decree nisi. (Mears, C. J., Walsh and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ.) (HOWARD v. HOWARD. L. R 4 A. 1 : 20 A. L. ——— S. 7—'For the time being,' meaning of—Validity of the Act.

Per Crump, J. (contra Marten, J.)—There is the possibility of reading into S. 7 of the Divorce Act an intention on the part of Legislature to adopt whatever test the Court of Divorce in England might from time to time lay dawn upon the matter of divorce but that is a forced and unnatural construction. Also it would be necessary to omit the words 'Subject to the provisions contained in this Act.' Had the Legislature intended any such result, it would have been easy to say in express terms that the provisions of the Act must be read as subject to the rules and principles applied from time to time by the Matrimonial Courts in England. They have chosen to say precisely the contrary. Any such construction would introduce an element of uncertainty where certainty is essential. The doctrine of English Courts has varied from time to time upon this point since 1895 domicil alone is recognized as conferring jurisdiction. S. 7 is a residuary section intended to provide for any matters which by inadvertence or otherwise are not expressly dealt with in the Act. It is not unusual in statutory drafting to insert provisions of this nature ex majore cautela more especially where an attempt is being made to codify in this country an unfamiliar branch of English Law. The expression 'rules and principles' points rather to the rules and principles on which the Courts deal with these matrimonial cases in requiring a certain degree of evidence and other cognate matters.

Per Marten, J. :—The Indian Divorce Act, 1869 is, and always has been, within the legislative powers conferred upon the Indian legislature by the Indian Councils Act, 1861. (*Macleod, C. DIVORCE ACT (IV OF 1869), S. 7.

In proceedings for divorce the evidence of the husband or wife alone ought never to be accepted without corroboration either by witness or at least by strong surrounding circumstances. The High Court will not confirm a decree for the dissolution of a marriage if it is not satisfied that the respondent was in fact served with a petition for divorce. It is contrary to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial causes in England acts and gives relief, to act on the uncorroborated testimony of a petitioner either to establish adultery or cruelty. In the absence of general orders on the subject, the proper course when service cannot be effected on the respondent is to apply to the Court for a special order as to how it is to be effected. Desertion implies an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it. ——S. 10—Adultery—Proof—Correspondence between parties is good evidence.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage the court may presume adultery if it is satisfied that guilty attachment subsisted between the parties and that they had opportunities to have guilty intercourse. The direct fact of adultery need not be proved. In a divorce case, the correspondence between the respondent and the co-respondent is very important evidence. For a decree for divorce, adultery of the husband together with desertion without reasonable cause for two years or upwards or with such cruelty as without adultery would entitle the wife to a divorce, must be proved. The cruelty must be dangerous to life, limb or health, bodily or mentally or a reasonable apprehension of it. A single severe assault resulting from a dispute as to jewellery would not amount to such cruelty but adultery of the husband, affords ground for judicial separation. ———Ss. 12, 13 and 14—Divorce—Adultery—Condonation—Resumption of co-habitation—Subsequent desertion—Effect of—Petition by husband—Unreasonable delay.

Resumption or continuance of co-habitation with complete knowledge of the wife's adultery amounts to condonation. Forgiveness to be condonation, must completely restore the offending party to the former status and must be followed by co-habitation. This is essentially the view adopted by the Legislature in S. 14 of the Divorce Act. Condonation of past matrimonial offences is however impliedly conditioned upon the future good behaviour of the offending spouse, and it follows that if after condonation the offences are repeated, the right to make the condoned offences a ground for divorce revives. . To constitute a revival of the condoned offences, the offending spouse need not however be guilty of the same character of offence as that condoned ; any misconduct is sufficient which indicated that the condonation was not accepted in good faith and upon reasonable conditions implied. Unreasonable delay to institute proceedings will generally be excused if it is really due to poverty. DIVORCE ACT (IV OF 1869), S. 15.

A mere refusal by the husband, without reasonable cause, of the matrimonial bed does not constitute desertion or such wilful neglect or misconduct as conduces to the wife's adultery and is not a sufficient ground for dissolution of marriage. Condonation is forgiveness of a conjugal offence with full knowledge of all the circumstances and is purely a question of fact. It is a blotting out of the offence imputed so as to restore the offending party to the position which he or she occupied before the commission of the offence. Mere forgiveness is not condonation ; condonation means completely restoring the offending party and must be followed by co-habitation. A collusion under S. 13 exists where the initiation of the proceedings for dissolution of marriage is procured or its conduct provided for by agreement between the spouses or their agents. Speaking generally, a guilty party cannot obtain relief by way of judicial separation any more than she can obtain relief by way of divorce. Desertion to justify judicial separation must be a wilful absention by the husband against the wish of the wife. 13 P. D. 141; 17 B. 624 Ref. Where a wife sues her husband for divorce on the ground of his adultery it is open to the husband in his written statement to counter-petition for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery.
